SENIOR CLASS ADMINISTRATION
NEW HAVEN · CONNECTICUT

Beatus ille, qui procul negotiis

In the old Yale College class books of seventy-five and more years ago it was customary for members of the Yale College Faculty to quote a line or so from one of the ancient languages and then to attach their signatures. Perhaps the line above best reflects my sentiments now in the midst of this Senior year of yours, which has been for me so crowded with work. At any rate I may well be permitted to envy my colleagues of long ago for the ease with which they could fulfil their obligations, so far as the class book was concerned.

The experiment of reviving the position of Class Officer beginning with your class has been successful, so far as I can judge, but the task of being pater familias to such a large family has entailed a lot of work, and it has not always been possible to give all the individual attention I might otherwise have desired to give. However, I shall always feel the deepest personal interest in all of you and hope for your best success. Your quite unique career as a class thus far will cause me to follow your futures with the greatest interest.

It should hardly be necessary to add that I appreciate most deeply the honor you have done me in dedicating your class book to me. I can only hope that you will all feel free to call on me for any service I may be able to render you.

Sincerely yours,

Hollon B. Farr.

March 10, 1929.

DURING our college days Yale has broadened tremendously, and as we leave she gives us as a parting word the promise of greater development. In this we rejoice, realizing that all we have enjoyed, that all which has become particular tradition to us, will be augmented for the benefit of those who are to follow. Whatever honor and esteem among the world's great institutions of learning may fall to her in the future cannot help being reflected in us, and the course of our lives—our successes and failures—likewise is reflected in her.

Recording the history which the Class of 1929 as undergraduates has written for Yale annals is by all means desired, but is a task which falls far short of completion in this volume. It is an earnest hope that the facts herein contained will bring back memories of friendships and associations too valuable for calculation—a true signification of what we have received during these four years for what we have given.

“To err is human.”

To begin in such manner may seem the part of cowardice; it is also in a sense the part of wisdom. The inscribing of a history such as this is not a task to be entered upon with too much assurance. And so I must require of my readers a certain amount of sympathy and leniency in their judgments and criticisms. If I err occasionally, if I seem partial, if I appear to slight—be good enough to remember that this is not written in collaboration (as it should be, damn it!) but by a single individual and that theoretically at least this history must cover the doings of a relatively numerous group of young men over a period of four years.

LIGHTS OUT

Freshman A—"Would you mind telling me where I can get the key to my room?"

Freshman B—"Now just how the hell does this damned University expect me to get in my room without a key? Hey! Janitor——!!!!"

Freshman C—(Tries knob, drops suitcase, lights cigarette)—"To hell with it." (Goes out to find people.)

* * * *

"You goin' to unpack now?"

"What for?—Aw, come on let's go see if we can find some beer somewhere."

* * * *

"Wonder where Jim's rooming."

"Dunno. Let's see if we can find him."

"Aw hell, no, too much trouble. Let's go see 'The Gold Rush.' "

* * * *

"Hello, Jack! How the hell are you? When did you get here?"

"Two weeks ago, for God's sake."

"What the hell for?"

"Football."

"Oh! that's right. I forgot."

* * * *

"The Freshman-Sophomore Rush will be omitted this year. There will be the customary† snakedance, however——"

—†One of those "good time had by all" get-togethers, no doubt.

* * * *

“——You have your mission in life. So have I. Mine is to fit up a student's room as it should be”——I. Mintz.

——And did you know, boys and girls, that the Ku-Klux Klan celebrates its birthday on Yom Kippur. Well! I'm not quite sure of that myself, but just think how simply divine it would be if it did so happen. Plain incongruous I should be prone to call it. How about you, Hebediah?

* * *

Hints: “Grades, on the scale of 100 are recorded only in multiples of five. The passing grade is 60; the lowest satisfactory grade is 70.”

——If only those damned profs would realize——

* * *

Penalties: “Marks are penalties incurred for absence from chapel or church——.”

——Look at that blithering idiot over there singing, would you!

* * *

“——All Freshmen are required to board at the University Dining Hall unless they are especially exempted by the Registrar——”

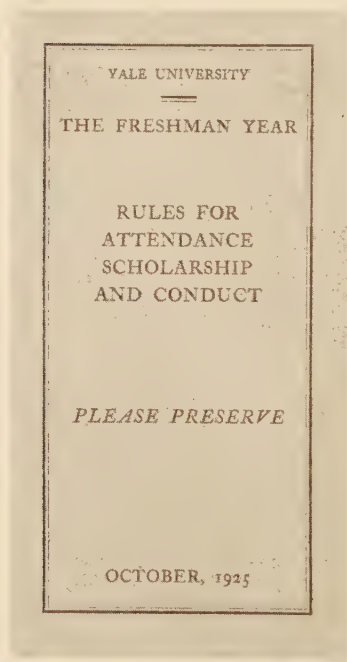

——The Army draft being much easier to escape.

* * * * *

Honor System: This system is in force in Freshman year in connection with examinations and other written tests. Its enforcement is left in the hands of the students.

——Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth.

Freshman Bible.

“—No alcoholic beverages are to be kept in any dormitory rooms of the University—” —Not for long anyway, eh, Jonah!

“—No firearms or air rifles may be kept in dormitory rooms; students on Rifle Team must deposit arms in Artillery Hall or with proctors.”

—Just as if a proctor might not be as good a marksman as the average Freshman!
—Will you kindly quit pointing that French .75 at me, Oswald!!

October 3, 1925—Our formal welcome. And what a welcome. Well—I ask you now—will you ever forget it? President Angell and his plea for sublimation of our homicidal tendencies with regard to the citizens of New Haven! Dean Walden and his apologia on the subject of the extinction of the Rush. And then didn't they go and give us ice cream, didn't they now, Hepzibah?

And remember that matriculation address: — “Success in Life a Matter of Worse than the Army draft.

Personal Effort,” says President Angell.

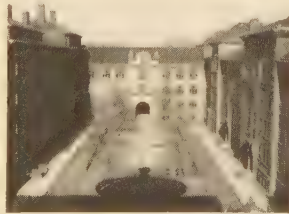

—If the poor man had only suspected what he was up against with us.

* * * * *

Those were the days of the beginning of the “huddle system” (not at Yale, of course, for we let the others make the failures or the successes before we move)—the days when Pantagrue ran the column, when Johnny Joss was captain of football, when “Who” and “That Certain Party” were new; when the Charleston was gripping the country; when "Young Woodley," "The Student Prince," "The Gorilla," and "The Master Builder" with Eva LeGallienne were opening; when we went to Tuttle's, Jigger McCarthy's, Carroll's, Bandere's, Chris', Cinderella, and to Winkle's, Barney's, Bernaise, Parody, Chantée, Steve's, and Sans Gêne—those were the days "when we were very young."

* * * * *

Other things beside football held the spotlight: Goss was packing the U Club; Spiel was turning Christian; Shelden was trimming Marker, Marker was financing Gwaltney, while Gwaltney trimmed Wood and Murphy; Pierce was financing the N. Y., N. H. & H.; Beeson was planning a metallurgical future; Lee was playing "Valencia"; Dodge was instigating Paine towards a literary career; Shepp, Stanley, Mulligan, and Otterson were busy flunking out; potential "young men on the make" were becoming kinetic—but there were only a few in those pristine times.

* * * * *

But 1929 did not attain to any real sense of solidarity until the call for crew candidates was issued. The day after the News noticed us with—"Either there is a grave misunderstanding in the minds of many members of 1929 or that Class is peculiar unto itself in a rather unfortunate way. When Coach Leader issued a call for crew men for Freshman fall rowing, some sixty were all who answered. Last year the number was two hundred and twenty-five."

Crew candidates.

* * * * *

——Here endeth the first lesson.

The very next day our Freshman team whipped Exeter 13-0, with Brandenburg and Garvey hogging the limelight. But did that appease our critics one whit? Well! Take a look at this if you think so, Hananiah!

Football action.

* * * * *

“——Complacency is fast being written into the history of the Class of 1929. Its first appearance sub iudice is not an auspicious one.” Ah! but just wait a few minutes, O.C.D., you don’t know yet what we can really write!

* * * * *

“The Crew develops real men—mens sana in corpore sano——. The fact that 1929 has the highest scholastic standing of any entering Yale class, together with its deadly apathy seems to augur that it is going to stick to the books.”

——And didn’t we?

* * *

Plaster Ward and Charlie Miller made themselves famous in the game with Roxbury, which we won 16 to 6. The very next week Ten Weir (a throwback from the Class of 1928) inflicted a crushing defeat on Phelps Dodge in the Fall Tennis Tournament. But was “Sunshine” put out by this? Well I guess not! What did he do but go right out and get himself elected captain of polo. (Weir has since taken up boxing in a sort of careless way.)

* * * * *

Soon after, Brandenburg was elected captain of football, and, without any real significance of sequence, there began that series of referendums on that glorified alarm clock, compulsory chapel. The first vote showed an overwhelming majority of undergraduates voting anti-compulsion. Sheff and some one third of the faculty stood opposed to the move: the former through a frenzy of fear that chapel abolition would deprive them of the one and only means of colonizing their little outpost, the latter because—well—just because.

The time has come the News has said
To speak without compunction:
Of God—and Yale—and how they meet,
Of chapel and its function,
And why the fellows sing so loud
And pray with so much unction.

* * * * *

But 1929 regained some of the limelight temporarily lost when Princeton succeeded in beating us by the score of 14-0 (the first Freshman football defeat by a member of the Big Three in six years).

And we placed fourth in the Fall Interclass Track Meet, which was something in itself.—But then when everything was going along so nicely what should Harvard do but come along and spoil the whole thing by letting us beat them 34-0. I never liked those Cambridgians anyway, did you, Tirshatha?

* * * * *

But a little ray of sunshine through the darkness, chums. The very day of the Harvard game:

“——A member of the Class of 1929 has been dismissed for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of liquor.”

——Well the old spirit was still there, and when one meets such a bully sporting fellow as that, well, it makes one feel exactly like giving a great big rousing cheer, doesn't it, Shebaniah?

Body building began the Monday after this (which was the same day—ah! fateful—that George Dean won the Cross Country Intercollegiates single-handed)—cf. Ripley.

Freshman Glee Club.

And then, remember this!

“——No action will be taken by the prosecuting attorney against those students and New Haven business men whose names appeared on the list found in the raid on the Trumbull Literary Club at 88 Church Street, nor will the list be published.”

——And so out of sheer boredom we bought some textbooks and wrote our names on the fly-leaves.

And Zidkijah, old boy, do you remember Aiken in the "Moss-tellaria"?

SEMI-ANNUAL EXAMINATION

JANUARY-FEBRUARY, 1926

English 10—Freshman English

I. King Henry IV

1. "Falstaff is old and youthful; corrupt and harmless; cowardly and daring; a knave without malice; a liar without deceit; a knight, a gentleman, and a soldier, without dignity, decency, or honor." Illustrate each of these statements by a definite reference to the play.

2. To what extent is the character of Hotspur exhibited by his opinions of his contemporaries? Consider, in your answer, what he said of (a) "a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd"; (b) the Douglas; (c) King Henry; (d) Owen Glendower; (e) Prince Hal.

II. Romeo and Juliet

1. In what words, and at what points in the tragedy, do Romeo and Juliet, respectively, criticize their own conduct?

2. "If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand."

(a) What was the dream? (b) What news was at hand?

3. Mention three moments in the play when Romeo has a premonition of tragic events to follow.

4. Comment upon the dramatic significance of such premonitions, making clear their relation to the whole theme of the tragedy as dealing with "a pair of star-cross'd lovers."

III. King Lear

1. On what two occasions does Lear imagine himself in a court of justice? On each occasion, what is the accusation against the prisoner, and what is the final disposition of the case?

2. On what occasion does Lear imagine himself in command of his armies? How do you account for this delusion? From what delusion is he suffering when he wakes in Cordelia's presence?

From O.C.D.:

“—return of the Freshman flags to the trees and rooftops around the environs of the Class of 1929 is an outward and visible sign that the fuss over the high scholarship of the ‘new Yale men’ and the rumors of their inactivity are unwarranted.—”

—We didn't mind over and above-board condemnation; it was bitter subtleties and ironical coups de gorge that really hurt, wasn't it, Meshezabeel?

And then—

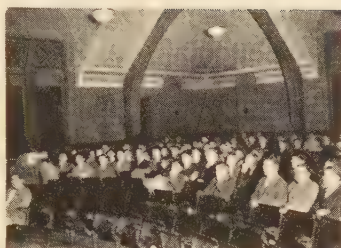

“—Starting with dearth of candidates—Freshman Crew—has been predominant lack of interest and ingenuity shown—1929. Never before—records campus organizations—such a demonstration of disinterestedness—apparent nonchalance—Freshmen! Get out for the Record and the News!!!!”

The week following the Dramat brought "The Big Parade" to town; Old Gold Cigarettes were put on sale; and we were taken off Pro. What a week, eh, Hachaliah!

And then "The Importance of Being Earnest" was presented for the edification of undergraduates—on Tap Day—a warning toll of the bell which reached the ears of only a few of us—God be thanked—in those halcyon days.

2d Sophomore—"You bet. How about you; have a good time out West?"

1st S.—"Did I! Say you should have come with us. Met a girl on our ranch said she knew you pretty well. Damn sweet kid too. I forget her name—something like McDougal, I believe."

2d S.—"You don't mean Jean Thompson, do you?"

1st S.—"Yeah! That was it. You know her?"

2d S.—"Yeah—Well, so long, see you later, old man."

"Hi Jim! Howsa boy!"

"Hello, blub-blub, how're you? (Now what the hell is that guy's name!)"

"You lucky devil!"

"Where're you?"

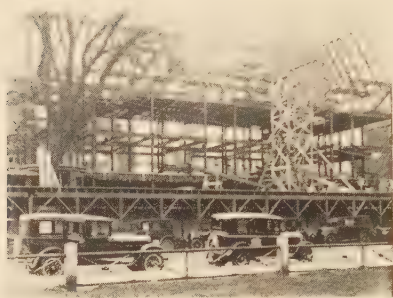

"Fourth floor, Lawrance."

* * *

A new stage setting greeted our eyes upon our return. During the summer we had been presented as a Class to the care of one H. A. Farr, who was to hold sway over us for the next three years under the official and monarchical title of Class Officer.

Nearing completion.

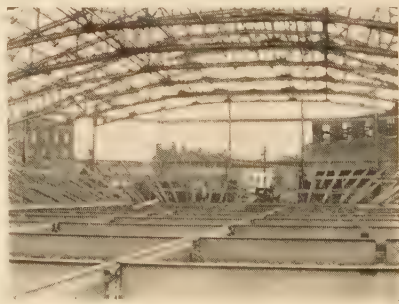

The new Bingham Hall.

Few of us realized that this was not a new and untried system, but merely a revival of an old one which had been in effect here at Yale years ago. In addition to this Dean Mendell had supplanted the retiring Dean Jones in that office.

The University Theatre was nearing completion, as was the new Bingham Hall.

York-Library was occupied by a conglomeration of Juniors and Freshmen. Plans were on foot for the new Library, William L. Harkness Hall, the Art Museum, and the colonnade for Commons.

Some two or three weeks after college had opened some one discovered that Dwight Hall was gone—which was rather fortunate, don't you think? Why?—why for many reasons. Let us take, for instance, a hypothetical case: A News editor says to a heeler, "How about going over to Dwight Hall and getting five hundred words on religion of some sort." (Remember, this is all hypothetical.) The News heeler asks what Dwight Hall is and the editor tells him where. The former departs in general direction of where Dwight Hall should be. After exhaustive search, returns physically depleted to explain to the latter that it has entirely disappeared. Imagine the chagrin and disappointment, not to mention the consternation, that would have resulted with regard to both the former and the latter (i.e., the heeler and the editor).

The Arena construction.

* * * * *

Several incorrigibles, we were told, had "gone Sheff." [For the edification of those readers who are unfamiliar with our

Yale "lingo" (dialect) I will explain that to "go Sheff" is an expression analogous in its suggestion to such idiomatic phrases as to "go broke" or to "go nuts." Also, I will explain for the sake of my own classmates that "Sheff" denotes a small community of extroverts located in the general vicinity of the graveyard behind Commons and Byers Hall (Freshman Library). It is fostered and gone bond for by the College in much the same degree as are Yale-in-China and like organizations.]

Freshman Library.

Remember the smooth looking blonde in "An American Tragedy"!

From the O.C.D.:

"Last year the Class of 1929 made a fiasco of the Honor System."

—You've got 'em scared now, team! Let's see every man jack of you get out there and give 'em hell this next half!!

More from O.C.D.:

"A marked lack of interest in balloting for Student Council members was shown by the Class of 1929 yesterday when only one hundred and fifty (CL) men attended the Class meeting in Battell Chapel—"

Dwight Hall was gone.

—I for one didn't know there were that many that wanted to be on the damned thing.

I was in a competition by this time, but there were plenty of other suckers, so I didn't mind so much.

Any one who succeeded in reading a Gundelfinger pamphlet from end to end will be delighted to know that out of all the willing to do their share towards heaping hot coals upon the heads of those of our critics who had dared to call our Class lethargic. We say—"Attaboy, Wyck!" and "Attaboy, Sug!"

And then there was that compulsory Class meeting (two cuts, if absent). And after a few songs and cheers from our young and lusty throats we elected somebody to the 1929 Student Council.

P.S. When was that? S. Panza.

And then the Black Bottom was originated, not to mention Greta Garbo's first picture, "The Temptress."

On November 10 Princeton severed all athletic relations with Harvard, the latter institution being most particularly annoyed that the former should have beaten them to it.

The Sterling Library.

And then, remember that magnificent game down at Princeton which we lost 10-7, but which we came so close to winning on that end run of Tibby Bunnell's.—And that pass from center which broke most of our hearts!—and that "Here,—you-take-it!" attitude of our team! The Princeton undergraduate body would have been on a bread and water diet for a long time if we had won, because you'll remember they actually gave us odds that year.

Failed to qualify. Al Jolson, Tony Sarg, and Harvard came to town the next week. Our feelings were somewhat salved by the 12-7 beating we gave the last named.

Sub rosa meetings in Harkness. "You can bring so-and-so if you'll come such-and-such." And then there was the guy who wouldn't be packed—I forget his name now. "If I were you, I'd hold out till spring, you're sure then."

Green ribbons, white ribbons, red ribbons—"Good evening, my name's blah-blah." Another knock. "Well, s'long, glad to've met you." Two more automatons enter, perspiring. The following gems were penned in a relatively "off" moment by one of the first, if not the first, members of our Class to achieve the distinction of election to the '29 Lit board.

The pristine tone and native charm of these verses marked the author even in these early days as one who deserved watching.

JUNIOR YEAR

——And this year it is Harkness Hall, Bingham, the Art Museum, Zeta, Beta, the Walter Camp Memorial, the new baseball cage and stands, not to mention Library Lane and Grove Boulevard. Where is it all going to end? Fifty years ago the Corporation was satisfied when they had installed a new clapper in the college bell as a year's improvements. Students lived in a shabby row of brick buildings and washed at the college pump. We now live in luxurious suites fitted with immaculate tile bathrooms. Are we any happier? Do we learn any more? Why all this tearing down and outlay of millions? Every year we seem to depart further from the small intimate college community of our fathers. We can feel the hot breath of Industrialism on the backs of our necks——

* * * * *

The fuzz has been rubbed off the peach now. Yale, the college and her institutions, has taken on a new significance. We begin to look into the future—but not so very far, oh no, our horizon is not a very distant one.—

Only a few of us retain that pristine charm of yore. We are college “men” with a purpose—but never mind what purpose.

And then Tunney sent that momentous message to “us students.” Said the champ: “All life’s a fight. Every one in the world is one of its principals. Its cardinal rule is give and take. The man who can take a knockdown and then get up and fight is the man who is going to win——.”

——Yoo-hoo! Mr. Dempsey!

A classmate's reflections on finding "Applications Closed":

Yale, Yale, Mother of Men,
With pride I praise thy name,
But neither pride nor praise can get
A ticket to the game.
From coast to coast they come to see
The Bulldog guard his goal,
But I am just a student here——
I can't get in the Bowl.

Oh, Eli Yale! I've learned your yells
And practiced every song.
I'd hoped to sit among thy sons
And cheer the team along,
But tho I've searched the country o'er
No ticket is for sale,
There's not a single seat for God
For country or for Yale.

And so with hopeless plodding steps
Back to the dorm I go
To follow every Eli play
Upon my radio.
I wonder what our team looks like——
Oh mine's a mournful dole!
I'm a son of Yale, the Mother of Men,
But I can't get in the Bowl!

* * * *

After Georgia† beat us we won from Brown, Dartmouth, and Army on successive Saturdays. Things were looking almost too bright—but then Caldwell was declared ineligible. Things began to pop. For once a voluntary and therefore successful rally was held—and when the team went on the field for the Princeton game, we conceded ourselves at least an even chance to win. The game wore on, however. We missed two magnificent opportunities to score, and Princeton was leading 6-0 with seven minutes to play. — Yale ball—4th down—18 yards to gain—they go into the huddle—Hoben calls for a short pass, the teams line up—tense silence—"Signals!" yells Charlesworth—back to the huddle—for God's sake, hurry!!—Hoben changes his mind—they line up again while the referee counts off the seconds—the ball is snapped—Signals.

Hoben retreats, turns suddenly, hurls a long pass down the left side of the field—Fishwick is free, his arms go up—He's got it!!—he's over the line—and a touchdown!!! Cox kicks the goal and Yale leads 7-6. Nothing stops them now, and Hammersley scores again within four minutes. Princeton is a licked team and the Yale stands hold not a single sane man.

Calling Week——

——“Every year each new class decides that packing is vicious and rules against it. Just as regularly some organization breaks faith. The only way to stop it is for the Sophomores in question to rise above accepting this kind of under-hand practice.”

*Bringing home

And we got a taste of what our predecessors had known: Climbing endless stairs, racing from one end of the campus to the other, singing ourselves blue in the face, meeting Sophomores on the Green at three in the morning, passing on so-and-so because he can bring so-and-so—etc., ad infinitum.

The Kay-dets.

There is no question that Junior year marks the climax point in the careers of most men at Yale. Most of us have plodded far enough up the collegiate Hill of Progress to enable us to get a glimpse, if a hazy one, of the Path Ahead. Gray hairs appear now, if ever, during the four years. Our thoughts and actions begin of necessity to attain to some degree of coördination (cf. the Inquisitor). If you were of that number fated to sacrifice your individuality you have done it by now.

How have you climbed?—Alone?—disdaining help or suggestions from the groups to the left and the right and knowing your own way the superior one? Did you start off at top speed, grow tired, and rest, only to awaken and see the footprints of those who have passed you, heard their laughter or their groans as they neared the top of the Hill? Or perhaps you saw early the need of assistance. Was the assistance forthcoming and was it the sort you desired? Or again perhaps you started off with a good lead and could turn and beckon occasionally, mockingly or encouragingly, to those in the rear.

Christmas vacation: The Glee Club trip and "This Woman Business"—parties of all varieties—and back to the grind.

* * * *

Mid-years had not the same significance or dread attached to them as before. They were merely things to be put behind one. We had come through two and a half years, and one had to be inordinately dumb not to be able to "get through" by now.

And then there burst into being that bitter and bloody controversy on the subject of the Honor System: "The Student Council has decided to take things into its own hands—" etc. Nearly a thousand communications were sent to the News.

I read in a course last term a saying of some literery man who said honesty is the best policy and it struck me that he sure is right. I dont wanta get mad over this but what I wanta say is that if more fellows here followed that Yale would be an awful better place.

——Anyway Yale did take a step backwards in the eyes of many by abolishing "Honor" and reinstituting the old, but efficient, Proctorial System—which, when you come right down to it, is much more in keeping with the new industrial era at Yale than anything so idealistic as the Honor System.

From the Alumni Weekly:

—"While four of Yale's upper classmen sped away to their holiday making at 12:10 on Wednesday, April 4, four dark gentlemen occupied the seats of said upper classmen in a lecture room of North Sheff Hall."

—Not even about the honey and the bees, Miss Fairfax?

Junior Class was perspiring—the Yale Club was compiling a "dope" sheet—men were giving odds on everybody, themselves included—diplomacy and hypocrisy were rife—lust and pure ambition walked hand in hand—"—the hell he is a legacy!"

* * *

Then Billy Phelps eased matters temporarily by producing a ray of sunshine in the person of Gene Tunney, who lectured on Shakespeare.

—"I set out and read The Winter's Tale ten times until I finally mastered the meter, not as intelligently as I wanted but enough to know what was going on."

—"I think mankind is much better off that Shakespeare has been given to us . . ."—"Shakespeare was a sport . . ."—"Ajax was just a great big ambitious fellow like Jack Sharkey given to extended mouthings . . ."

—On the whole, however, the general impression was that Tunney was a thorough gentleman, who would do better to give up either boxing or Shakespeare.

The night of Wednesday, May 16, saw our "sons" playing the rôle of fathers to most of us. This "bottle night" preceding Tap Day is one of the most glorious and effective traditions that the undergraduate still fosters.

Then came Tap Day.

And then came Tap Day. Well, it is something of an experience anyway.

* * *

Derby Day and the spring house parties followed with blessed rapidity—And I think Yale vanquished Cornell and Princeton with ease.

* * * * *

Spring was really here now—it hadn't been before. Joe Lowes was elected Class secretary, and the Hubbard-for-Deacon-Club was organized. Baseball, track, and crew claimed the interest of a few—armchairs and Savin Rock and Momauquin for most of us.

* * * * *

And June and exams came along just as had been predicted—and we were ambling down the other side of the Hill.

SENIOR YEAR

“——our ease——”?

“Taxi—taxi? Red Top cabs—plennya cabs—where to, sir?”

“Harkness Tower (by God!).”

Upon the first formal gathering of our Class (in Sprague) to receive our schedules, Mr. Farr presided. Said “Toot”: “Please come up as your name is called, get your schedules, and pass out.”

——Now, Mother, what can you expect when I am surrounded by influences like this?

* * * *

And we were greeted with stories of the Glee Club’s travels through Abyssinia and Kamchatka——and how the Whiffenpoofs (in a drunken moment) elected Henning (who has insisted upon going to meetings throughout the rest of the year). And we learned that the largest Freshman class ever to enter Yale had arrived in the person of 1932. We sighed with disdain and content when we read exhortations to “come out for the News and the Record,” to heel athletic competitions, etc., etc. We looked over our schedules and reassured ourselves that we had no Saturday classes and could leave for New York after a 12:10 Friday—that is, most of us did. We noticed that the Heavenly Twins & Co. had monopolized Calliope Court. But of all impressions the most vivid perhaps was the one of relative importance and freedom in our positions as Seniors.

* * *

Shuberts' greeted us with "The Trial of Mary Dugan," "The Shanghai Gesture," and "Three Cheers" (Will Rogers) in quick succession. And some of us threw away our prejudices and went to see "The Singing Fool"—a talkie.

* * * * *

Bedlam broke loose with the inculcation of the political hubbub into the college routine. Hoover and Smith clubs grew up overnight, buttons were worn on the lapel, debates of the bitterest nature—formal and informal—took place. The formal debate was won by the Smith advocates, the audience voting 99-69 in their favor. There is still some question as to the outcomes of the informal mêlées.

* * * * *

Sancho Panza summed up the whole situation in his usual pregnant manner thus—

—"During all the various campaigns, whispering and otherwise, contingent on the election of a new President, this department has maintained a respectable silence. We have held ourselves aloof and kept out of petty party politics. We have voiced no opinions, expressed no desires.

"To-day comes the battle of the century. We feel ourselves drawn into the controversy like a wash cloth into a wringer. No longer can we sit silently by while the undergraduate political clubs sass each other through communications in the News. Indeed, no longer will it do those clubs any good to sass each other. It is high time for us to take an active part in rendering articulate the great thoughts of the great people of this great country. And in thus declaring ourselves we have filled up four inches of column without saying a damn thing, which is just what the presidents and communication-writers of both Republican and Democratic clubs have been doing all fall."

And then Norman Thomas came along and in a delightful lecture drew us a picture of the corruption of the two major parties, the shallowness of their respective platforms—which he held to be really one—and the actual state of labor and industrial conditions of to-day. His grasp of the true situation of the United States to-day was as comprehensive as it was profound. Consequently some of us threw away the buttons we had been wearing and became rabid followers of Mr. Thomas.

The West Point Cadets came to town as usual, all in clean uniforms and with their fifty cents ($0.50) spending money. Incidentally, they brought Cagle & Co., who left us smarting under an 18-6 beating. This was setback number one. The nicest thing about it was that we were blissfully ignorant of what was coming later in this line.

And then that horrible old article appeared in Harper's entitled "Young Men on the Make." Some of us thought it was just plain mean. However, I heard a lot of other fellows laughing about it. Somebody told me afterwards that they were just having a time laughing it off.—It is rumored that the author is to follow up very soon with a complementary article entitled "Young Women on the Make," which ought to be bad—and probably will.

this time instead of later, the purpose being to give all football players concerned something to take their minds off the routine of constant training, etc. I said "dim echoes," but that is not quite true for, "Age again doting and flexible," some of us insisted upon aiding in the packing, etc., that is attendant upon these periods. The controversy that arose subsequent to elections concerning the "conversion of the fraternities to eating clubs" was a very significant one. And there is little doubt of its truth. Yale cannot foster fraternities of the mid-western variety much longer. Ten years from now when we return we may expect to find them either purely social units cut off from their national bodies—or not at all, which is more likely.

Has died into an echo; it is fit
The spell should break of this protracted dream.
The torch shall be extinguish'd which hath lit
My midnight lamp—and what is writ, is writ;
Would it were worthier! but I am not now

Healthy, free, the world before me,
The long brown path before me leading wherever I choose.
Henceforth I ask not good-fortune, I myself am good-fortune
Henceforth I whimper no more, postpone no more, need nothing,
Done with indoor complaints, libraries, querulous criticisms,
Strong and content I travel the open road.

CLASS POEM

As delivered on Class Day by Washington Dodge, 2d.

For one brief interlude we lived a dream,
A golden dream that lingers still with Spring
And softens this harsh cleavage with its theme
That June can't be the doom of everything.

There is a half-grown world we've learned to cherish,
Our hopes and failures map its soft terrain;
We know its many realms shall never perish
And feel that all this strange lament is vain.

Its contour lines have formed a secret key
To all the yearning splendor that we passed,
And are a restless picture where we see
The meaning of this mystic dream at last.

Our hopes and failures map its soft terrain—
Its glades are pleasant dreams to which we've clung,
And young ideals that will return again
With dusk, when some familiar song is sung.

Its landmarks are the scattered mounds of sand
That once were towers we built to praise our names,
And uncompleted castles that we planned
From blue prints of ambition etched in flames.

And somewhere in this dream-world's wide expanse
We found the strength that helps us to allay
The bondage of the future's stern advance
And the sudden solitude we feel to-day.

For one brief interlude we lived a dream,
A golden dream that lingers still with Spring
And softens this harsh cleavage with its theme
That June can't be the doom of everything.

CLASS ORATION

As delivered on Class Day by R. E. Houston, Jr.

THE Class historian has most appropriately touched upon the experiences of our Class in all their interesting and amusing aspects. But the task that confronts me is of a different nature and, I might add redundantly, much less entertaining. In the scope of a few fleeting minutes, I am supposed to bring you from that blissful state of care free reminiscence to the very verge of a serious sentimental breakdown. Such a stupendous feat might well bear comparison to that of the mystic mind reader visiting New Haven's famous summer resort at Savin Rock, who proposes in ten minutes to tell over five hundred people just what their most sacred thoughts are. Like that eminent psychologist, I must delve deep in the mysteries of the human mind and emerge with the precious product, a complete analysis of our gratitude and loyalty to Yale.

All of us here have looked forward to this great event with mixed emotions. Some have dreaded since Freshman year even the thought of working and so have put off graduation as long as possible, even escaping it in many cases. Others have waited impatiently for this chance to begin successful life careers, spurred on by hopes and ambitions stretching all the way from glorious self-sacrifice to comfortable financial retirement. This impatience, it may be noted, in certain instances is due to an even more pressing cause, as when some beautiful girl has agreed to wait till after graduation. Then there are others in our illustrious Class who maintain a neutral attitude. They are fazed by nothing, and this ceremony is merely one more happening in their eventful lives. Probably the great majority of us, however, don't know just what we do feel. We realize that graduation is a necessary step, inevitable now at least, but we fail to take in all that it means—the conclusion of undergraduate days, the severing of old connections, the temporary or permanent separation of friends, and complete change from the old surroundings and routine we were just beginning to really understand and appreciate, with new responsibilities and duties staring us in the face. Surely this is enough to make us rather sentimental and just a little uneasy in our concern for the uncertain future. Yet it is likely that all of us have harbored more or less one outstanding fallacy in our attitude during these four years. We have had the tendency to believe that our lives are made or unmade according to the recognition we receive while undergraduates. Not that we are Pringle's "Young men on the make," coldly calculating each separate move in so many dollars and cents; the idea has been rather to stand out in some way, regardless of the financial liabilities it may or may not incur. There has been a sort of nervous tension everywhere, a feverish concern over success in extra-curriculum activities, with a wild excitement about making this and achieving that—practicing day and night to be on the Varsity Chess Team, striving desperately in a furious competition over the Students' Humidor Agency, heeling the Playcraftsmen, then holding out for the Dramat, only to find at last that they are merged and both mean the same thing. Until gradually this atmosphere of keyed-up endeavor has molded itself into a sort of collegiate philosophy, the fundamental principle of which is that one has accomplished or failed according to the success achieved in the Class of 1929. Those who have realized all their cherished desires and have thus ridden the crest of the wave are now relaxing, perhaps to meditate contentedly on their college laurels. While those who have not been so successful, and especially the ones who have swelled the ranks of the great unnoticed, feel they must be absolutely resigned to a blighted career or at least one heavily handicapped. So to both these classes, the fortunate and the less fortunate, this one graduation ceremony, marking the culmination of four varied years of talent, effort, or inactivity, must seem the very climax of our earthly struggle. Yet on the very face of it such an attitude is absurd, since our experiences here are only the preparation for the real tests to come later on, and the student who has met a little disappointment is probably just that much better prepared.

But analyzing and examining all these different attitudes, we instinctively feel that they are inadequate, that they are not true outspringings of that deeper and finer feeling for our Alma Mater, that sense of genuine loyalty which has always been present in a way, but which now is just beginning to force itself to the front, and on this occasion especially to take precedence over all other emotions. From the very beginning we have been nourished on the tradition of the wonderful, unfailing loyalty of Yale alumni. In fact, the existence of such a feeling is almost an axiom with the student body. What is the great contribution, then, that Yale has made to her host of graduates, that gift which has bound them to her with a sense of love and gratitude which grows stronger with the years?

Glancing back over her records for the last two hundred and twenty-five years or more, we find engraved thereon the names of men prominent in every field of endeavor, in every part of the nation, in every period and crisis of our country's history. Page after page we turn, from the earliest period to the present day, and on each one is written such outstanding names as: Jonathan Edwards, Nathan Hale, Silas Deane, Eli Whitney, John C. Calhoun, Noah Webster, James Fenimore Cooper, Samuel Morse, William Graham Sumner, Benjamin Silliman, William Howard Taft. All these and many others of equal greatness confront us as the result largely of Yale's training and influence.

And so even this briefest of surveys helps us to understand a little more clearly the fountain springs of our own loyalty. Like these famous alumni, we too have been trained, and in most cases trained in spite of ourselves, to take if we will a leading part in national and world affairs. Whatever part has been ours here, whether that of the big-activities man or merely the disinterested spectator, that of athlete, grind, or social light, still, inevitably, each one of us has been confronted with problems we're sure to meet beyond the college walls. Our successes and failures, triumphs and defeats, are probably similar to those of the outside world. But with this difference, that all this valuable experience has been gained in an atmosphere of culture, and with the advice and counsel of education's best minds—conditions that cannot fail to leave an indelible stamp upon us hereafter. Naturally, then, we are going out more fully rounded and better prepared to take our respective places in the callings we have chosen.

To-day there is a special significance to this wonderful training. More than ever before the world is calling for American leaders. In fact, it is asserted that the United States is entering upon her greatest age, an age of almost unrivaled ascendancy. In the westward march of civilization, she stands forth as the geographical center, as the last bulwark before the Orient, holding thus the strategic outlook, not only on the Atlantic, but also on the now all-important Pacific Ocean. More important, the United States, through the development of all her land and resources, completely dominates the new economic order. American capital supplies the motive force throughout Europe; while American machines, with their emphasis on speed and efficiency, are actually revolutionizing Old World industry. Even our system of economics which puts the laborer on the same basis as the capitalist and harmonizes their interests through joint-stock and profit-sharing schemes, thus making the common workman an integral part in the coöperative effort to save time—even this American system based on American democracy is being adopted far and wide. Likewise, American men are being called upon throughout the world to supply the method and initiative in foreign rehabilitation and development efforts. The American corporation idea, the American plan of large-scale organization, the American moving picture films, our love of superlatives and accident statistics, our skyscrapers, and even our chewing gum—are all penetrating inevitably into the strongholds of the older civilization. “Already,” declares a foreign newspaper, “we have jazz, quick lunches, exaggerated flappers, happy endings to tales of wives running away from their husbands, chewing gum, and ‘idiotic tests’ in our schools. All we lack is football, and now we are going to have that too.” In India, we are told, “it is America, not Moscow, that the workmen idealize; it is Mary Pickford, not Mahatma Gandhi, whom the children of India follow.”

Yet, because of this very ascendancy and penetration, the United States has made herself a possible target for jealousy and envy among other nations. As it is, international relations everywhere are strained to a dangerous degree, while the hatred and fear of American supremacy is undoubtedly becoming more and more evident each year. This new age, therefore, is also critical for great statesmen, men who can step into the breach and preserve definitely the dearly-bought world peace as it wavers in the balance. In fact, wherever we look there is a remolding of the old conceptions; new fields and new opportunities are opening in science, medicine, law, business, and theology, as well as in international diplomacy.

With this thrilling outlook, we begin to realize what these four years at Yale will mean to us. We have been given a training in the principles of leadership for which we may well be grateful. But now the responsibility falls on us to prove our gratitude by showing ourselves worthy representatives of our Class and our great Alma Mater.

Nott, an art student, at 562 York-Library in Junior year, and with Manville at 846 Memorial Quadrangle in Senior year.

Wright's home address is Washington Avenue, Ardsley Park, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.

HAMILTON WASHBURNE WRIGHT, "Ham," was born January 12, 1903, in Kuala Lumpur, Malay Peninsula. He has also lived in Cambridge, Mass., and Washington, D. C., and in England, France, and Germany. His father, Hamilton Wright, who graduated from McGill in 1896 and later studied at Cambridge University and at Heidelberg, was connected with the United States Department of State and also did medical research work in England and the Malay Peninsula; his death occurred on January 9, 1917. Mrs. Wright, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Washburn, studied at Radcliffe College. Wright is a brother of Washburne Wright, '29, and a nephew of William D. Washburn, '88, and Edwin C. Washburn, ex-'94 S.

He was prepared for college at the Friends School in Washington, the Institution Sillig in Vevey, Switzerland, and Phillips-Exeter. He entered Yale with the Class of 1928, but withdrew in January, 1925, and returned the next fall as a Freshman with our Class. Wright was on the 1929 Freshman Football and Track teams and on the University Football Squad and the University Track Team in Sophomore and Junior years. He has numerals and an "AYA." He belongs to the University Club, the Cup Men, Chi Psi, and Scroll and Key, and he served on the Interfraternity Council. Wright roomed at 132 Wall Street with E. Cornish, Jr., and L. W. King, both '28 S., during his first year at Yale and lived alone at 133 Wall Street the following year. He and Loud roomed together for the next three years (Haze living with them in Junior year), at 286 Edwin McClellan, 663 Wright, and 726 Memorial Quadrangle.

He plans to go into business. His home address is 1731 N Street, Washington, D. C.

WASHBURNE WRIGHT, "Wash," was born in Baltimore, Md., on January 22, 1904. He has also lived in Germany, England, Maine, Massachusetts, and New Jersey and in Washington, D. C. Wright's brother, Hamilton W. Wright, is also a member of our Class, and information about his family is given in his biography.

His preparatory education was received at the Institution Sillig in Vevey, Switzerland, the Western High School in Washington, and Phillips-Exeter. He played on the Freshman Football Team and served as captain of the Freshman Crew, and he was on the University Football Squad during the next three years and on the University Crew Squad in Sophomore and Junior years. Wright has numerals in crew and an "AYA" in football. He belongs to the University Club and to Chi Psi. He roomed with P. Davis and J. P. Gasser, both '29 S., at 137 Wall Street in Freshman year, with Thompson at 213 Farnam in Sophomore year, and with Cookman and Pope, at 673 Wright and 1038 Memorial Quadrangle, for the next two years.

Wright expects to enter the employ of the Mexican Seaboard Oil Company after graduation. His permanent address is 1731 N Street, Washington, D. C.

GEORGE WARREN WYCKOFF, "Wyke," was born in Elmira, N. Y., on October 6, 1906. His father, George W. Wyckoff, who spent two years at Cornell, was president of the Wyckoff Wood Pipe Company at the time of his death on May 9, 1922. His mother's maiden name was Eleanor Silsbee.

Wyckoff was prepared for college at the Hotchkiss School.

He was on the Freshman Football and Swimming squads, and he headed the Dramatic Association managership in Freshman year and served on the Record board in Senior year. He was also a member of the Senior Prom Committee, and he belongs to the University Club (serving on the board of governors in Sophomore year, as secretary-treasurer in Junior year, and as president in Senior year), the Mohicans, What is Yale Four, the Sword and Gun Club, the Old Crows, Psi Upsilon, and Scroll and Key.

Wyckoff roomed with Goss and C. K. Hubbard all four years, at 484 Haughton, 42 Vanderbilt, 660 Wright, and 750 Memorial Quadrangle.

He expects to go into the banking business after graduation. His home address is 600 Church Street, Elmira, N. Y.

HENRY WOODWARD WYLIE, "Hen," was born December 20, 1906, in Torrington, Conn. His father, Harry John Wylie, was president of Harry J. Wylie, Inc., in that place. His mother's maiden name was Nellie Grace Hopkins. His brother, Sidney H. Wylie, graduated from Yale in 1926.

Wylie received his preparatory education at the Torrington High School and at Phillips-Andover. He was on the Freshman Wrestling Team and was captain of the Freshman Soccer Team. He was a member of the University Soccer Team for the next three years, and in Sophomore year he was also on the University Wrestling Team. Wylie has two minor "Y's." He is a member of Alpha Delta Phi. He roomed with J. A. Drake at 310 Temple Street as a Freshman and with Ritchie for the remainder of his course, at 115 Welch, 21 Vanderbilt, and 887 Memorial Quadrangle.

Wylie will go into business upon the completion of his course at Yale. His permanent address is 25 Hotchkiss Place, Torrington, Conn.

HAYS RICHMAN YANDELL, "Bud," was born October 27, 1907, in Seattle, Wash. Since 1920 his home has been in San Antonio, Texas. His father, Claiborne Bowman Yandell, who studied at the University of Washington for two years, is secretary and treasurer of the Rylander Cotton Machines Company in San Antonio. His mother's maiden name was Calla Richman. Yandell is a brother-in-law of Morgan H. McClement, ex-'14 S., and Arthur McClement, '25.

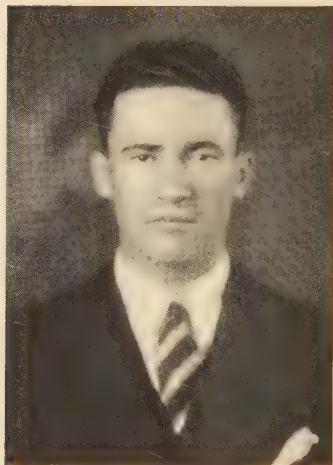

His preparation for college was received at the Main Avenue High School in San Antonio and at the San Antonio Academy. He was a scholar of the second rank in Freshman year and received an oration Junior appointment. Yandell was on the Freshman Class Tennis Team and was a member of the University Swimming Squad for the next two years. In Junior year he was also on the Class Football Squad. He belongs to the University Club, the Old Crows, the Cup Men, Delta Kappa Epsilon, and Elihu. Yandell roomed with W. E. de-Buys, '29 S., at 432 Fayerweather in Freshman year and afterwards with Moody and Spiel, W. Bradley, ex-'28, and O'Brien living with them in Sophomore year. They lived at 272 Durfee, 522 York-Library, and 865 Memorial Quadrangle.

Yandell is planning to enter the Harvard Medical School. His home address is 803 West King's Highway, San Antonio, Texas.

LOUIS MAXWELL ZIMMERMAN, "Lou," was born in New Haven on June 25, 1907. His father, Samuel Zimmerman, is a retired real estate agent. His mother's name before her marriage was Leah Rosofsky.

He received his preparatory training at the New Haven High School, and he was a scholar of the second rank in Freshman year and received an oration appointment in Junior year. Zimmerman was a member of the Freshman Wrestling Squad. He lived at home all four years.

Zimmerman took the combined law course during Senior year, and he expects to continue his studies in the Law School.

His permanent address is 711 Washington Avenue, New Haven, Conn.

ATHLETICS

IF one were to glance over the changes that have taken place in the athletic personnel and equipment since the infant days of 1929's first year here, he would be astounded at the numerous innovations and benefits which have been established. Truly to-day more than ever Yale's policy of "Athletics for All" is bearing fruit. Instead of the strenuous intercollegiate meets and games of one sort or another of a quarter of a century ago, which included only those who were professed athletes, the average undergraduate is athletic. Instead of the specialized divisions of the classes into athletes or non-athletes, every one today sports a numeral hat, an "AYA" sweater, or a gold doo-dab on his watch chain.

In glancing over various publications prior to writing this survey of what most interests men like Grantland Rice in regard to our Class, the first mention athletically that concerns us is the announcement in 1926, on Washington's Birthday, of the plans for a new Hockey Arena capable of seating 4,000 people and bringing to Yale the chance to get somewhere in hockey. Then whispers about a Walter Camp Memorial to the "Grand Old Man of Football" stirred the breezes of sport gossip that wafted around the Oval. Bebe Spiel, Garvey, Hoben, and the Muse of 1929, Dick Goss, were the men of our Freshman year who followed all the sport doings with care. Jeff Sawyer can tell you offhand the first name and batting average of every baseball player that ever wore those mystic letters Y-A-L-E across his chest.

But skipping over the activities of our Freshman teams for the time being, we turn to Sophomore year. With envy we looked back at the Freshman Football Field. Why had it not boasted night arc lights for late practice when we toiled there? When we trotted over to scrimmage the Varsity, and Butch Loud intercepted a pass and ran 90 yards for a touchdown, he did it without the experience the yearlings have to-day of practicing under powerful arc lights. Butch warmed the hearts of every single scared Freshman candidate by that run, yet it took three more years before Bowl occupants could thrill as he wormed his way in and out.

But we still had the fairly recent Lapham Field House to gloat in, a locker building which must be the despair of all of our opponents. We returned in the fall of 1926 to see the new Arena in the process of construction and were undergraduates when hockey was made a major sport for the first time in history. The following spring the new fairways of the Tompkins course were opened and many a classmate jounced in and out of town in a rickety bus to shoot a few holes.

Coxe Memorial Cage.

Apparently the gods that be in the A. A. Office wanted to splurge while 1929 was in college, because soon there came the new baseball stands, filling a real need, followed by the hasty erection of the Coxe Memorial Cage. Here Juniors could run, jump, throw weights, baseballs, footballs, and queer saucerlike disks to their hearts' content. In one corner Fred Sturdy, understudy to Captain Sabe Carr, 1928, could shinny up a bamboo pole and "faw down" without fear of landing on Dick Goss' marks in his longest broad jump. Here too, we watched Jeff

Sawyer throw many a weary ball limbering up his glass arm, when it was too cold outside. And if one stayed long enough, he saw the hordes of tramping gladiators of the Bowl sweep by in clouds of dust behind Max Eddy's heels in the early season indoor practice. Even Johnny Hoben could not throw a forward that would reach the rafters of Yale's latest athletic structure. Lacrosse fields, class baseball and football fields, tennis courts, and a new road around the Bowl, have all been added in the last twelve months. And to cap it all, early returning football candidates this fall found the Bowl in a state of undress, prior to its new coat of cement. Later, Mal Stevens, not to be outdone, went the Bowl one better by providing the team with new style hooded woolen jackets and bought himself an up-to-date clipped camel's-hair coat.

But enough on the building changes when it has been our privilege to mourn the loss and welcome the coming of men who give their teams all they have. We have witnessed the passing of dearly beloved Tad Jones, who worked for Yale as a quarter back before there was any Bowl and before we had our present excellent facilities. The Class of 1929 can well rejoice in later years that it had the chance to know Tad and all he stood for. It was a bitter loss to see him step off the field for the last time stepped in to do a fine job on the semi-molded team of Coach Wanamaker's. George Taylor, in basketball, came here during our first year. He has given his attention to inter-class sports as well as Varsity basketball and has popularized class athletics a great deal. Al McGall, who puttered around the field events in track, has gone, and Frank Kanaly is rapidly winning the track aspirants' confidence. Izzie Winters, whom the whole Class knows (or anyhow but encouraging to know that he still heads the Graduate Football Committee. And in his place, Mal Stevens, who also worked for Yale on the field, has come. Every man on the squad last fall loved to work for Steve, and the team, which was not particularly glorious against its opponents, hated itself for not turning out a championship aggregation for the new mentor.

Hockey, too, has reopened under new management since 1929 moved to Harkness. Larry Noble, who played with many of our Class on one field or another, knows his brother), turned over the wrestling mat to Eddie O'Donnell.

And for more football coaches—Myron Fuller we lost a year ago, but Major Prichard has come to guide us. Winslow Lovejoy taught "that line of Blue" a thing or two, and Ducky Pond coached last fall's scrubs through an undefeated season to a mythical championship of all scrubdom. For the sake of those that follow us, we hope that these same coaches will get the football itch again next fall and show up to help

Steve. Well, of course, there are lots of men that come and go, but there is also one that has stayed quite some time and makes a good team out of whatever material he gets. Bob Kiphuth has turned out championship teams year after year and is as well liked by the Class as any one in it. He puts Smith commuters like Pope and Hogen through enough laps daily to make them wish the Connecticut River ran through New Haven so they could swim to Northampton; but he does turn out good teams.

Fred Sturdy.

With all the buildings built and with all the coaches come and gone, we have not yet touched on our first year here and what our Class did during the Common Freshman Year. Perhaps one of the greatest experiences a fellow can have is to report for Freshman football under Pat Osbourne and fool around with over one hundred of his classmates for the two weeks' pre-college training. During the Freshman football season every fellow gets to know what fine men do come to Yale from some other school besides his own. Exeter and Andover, no longer rivals, are teammates. Hotchkiss, Taft, The Hill, and "the Saints" hear of Thatcher School, in California, and realize that Santa Barbara is not in Mexico, and so with the rest. Under men like Pat and Essy Essylstyn, Joe Becket, and a couple of ineligible upper classmen, the green Freshman learns his team played every game into the two-figure score and rolled up 99 points against their opponents' 20 (14 of which were Princeton's). Two of the original team have now passed away, but the Class will not forget Twit Tweedy and Tex Kopperl. Charlie Miller left to get married and now carries the "bawl" at night back and forth across the room. Most of the rest kept on and played either first string or scrub football for the next three years.

"Cleopatra."

The eleven men who got numerals in baseball under Coach Clyde Engle brought the Class nine victories and two ties out of fourteen games, but lost to Princeton, and thus the Big Three Championship. Captain Sawyer and Butch Loud did most of the pitching, but Johnny Garvey, a handy man with the bat, struck out sixteen of his former schoolmates to beat Roxbury 8 to 3. In the Harvard game Jeff allowed only five scattered singles, while Jake Grove got a homer, a triple, and two singles out of four times at bat. Every one knows we won 10 to 1.

The Class certainly excelled in track, with a victory in the fall and spring interclass track meets and the Big Three Championship. In the meet with Princeton, which we won 100½ to 34½, Brandenburg took 11 points and Captain Schurman got first in both of the hurdle races for 10 more points.

Gordon Tweedy.

Dick Goss.

The diminutive Crile threw the hammer for a first in both this meet and the one with Harvard a week later. His 165 pounds have since turned to easier work. He and Spiel (2 tons short weight) have been beating Boots Britton and Ted (Chip) Williams at bridge ever since. In the Harvard meet we got ten of the fifteen first places. Paxton, Watson, Jacob, Schurman, Crile, Brandenburg, Beeson, Kaul, and Fred Sturdy got first in both meets and, in addition, Buzz Richards got a first against Harvard. Sturdy did eleven feet, six inches, then, but in February, 1929, at the N.Y.A.C. games he did 14 feet, which is a real threat on Carr's record of 14 feet, 1 inch. About 28 men got their numerals for track.

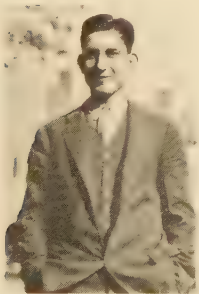

Mike Murphy, Freshman crew coach, who left only last winter to become head coach at Wisconsin, made crew popular among the Class oarsmen, but only after the News had suggested that the lackadaisical Freshmen do something to show they had Class spirit. With light material he did a fine job, but an unfortunate incident at Gales Ferry threw the annual race with Harvard away. The Boston Herald said on the subject of the indiscretion about which every one in the Class knows words which will express the feeling about the situation; and let it be forgotten. "Honor is of more importance than a boat race and it is by such deeds that a University earns its reputation." At Cayuga, the Crew won the annual Yale-Princeton-Cornell regatta despite a stormy day. It was the only race of the afternoon and the Freshmen won by one length from Princeton and two and one half lengths from Cornell in 13 minutes, 8 seconds. The Alumni Weekly said that a crew that could row with three inches of water in a boat that sank about one hundred yards past the finish of the race was a crew of "Good deep-sea oarsmen." On the same day the 150-pound Crew defeated Harvard at Derby by one and one half lengths. Wash Wright, at stroke, was captain of the heavy boat.

In other sports there are lots of victories and probably lots of defeats, but some of us may have forgotten Freshman athletes whose swan song in sports was sung that year. How many know that George Dean and Jordy Hays were on the Cross Country Team running long-distance? Since then they have turned their attention to long-distance dr-nk--g or something else, from reports around the campus. The Soccer Team has been a silent but successful organization. The Freshmen who combine football and track, captained by Henry Wylie, won over half their games, and last fall, captained by John Whitelaw, the undefeated University Soccer Team won seven and tied two games of their nine-game schedule, with Whitelaw, Wylie, and Sleath picked for All-American.

In basketball Captain Charlesworth led his men to a Big Three Championship, something the Varsity has a hard time annexing, with Fodder, Fodder, and Fodder the only ones in the Class who played with Dud the first year. Merrill, who when he plays is good, has always suffered from scholastic ineligibility, such as when he had to give up the football managerial competition, or has a glass knee or something. When you see him waltzing at the deb parties in New York thirty years from now ask him how his knee is.

Hockey players of the Class are conspicuous because of their ability to get on or off probation. Most of them get on either just before the season opens or, what is worse, when it is half over. The Freshman Team lost to both Harvard and Princeton and, in addition, had four games cancelled. That was before the new Arena was available, however, or there might be a different story to tell.

Let it suffice for Captain Pope's Swimming Team to say that since it was Kiphuth-koached it was undefeated. About twenty-two men got their numerals. Water Polo was not quite so fortunate, losing to the Montclair A. C.,

which might yet be considered a Kiphuth victory, because several of the Montclair poloists had been under Bob's tutelage.

It is fitting to elaborate on the idea of athletics for all by the example of Captain Tweedy of the Freshman Tennis Team. He served his year nobly with almost a successful season in that three matches were won and one tied out of the eight played.

Our Gordon continued with tennis through the years, but was bored by the quiet of the game and began looking for more excitement. After heeling the News (and that is a real sport, too), which he made, tennis looked sort of dull for a time. To remedy the situation Gordon got into a foot race in the spring of Junior year with one of the local gendarmes, and, after an exciting chase through the thoroughfares of New Haven, reached the goal or gaol (modern spelling, jail), where he played several games lasting all through the night with some teammates who were assigned by the Captain or Sergeant to play with him.

sweater and, for a major award, the numeral hat. Thus did those whose prowess won them positions on a first or second team get some insignia which tells the world, if the world creeps up behind them on rainy days, what class they belong to. But let us not leave Freshman year without some mention of the many who struggled in interclass meets, in obscure barges at the Harbor, behind a trusty rifle in the Gun Club, or, even more loyally, roomed with one of the athletes of the Freshman year. Also let us remember that our Class participated in what was then a substitute for the old Freshman-Sophomore Rush—wrestling matches held on the Sophomore campus soon after we had assembled here.

All-American.

Gordon will probably be content with tennis after this, although the city press grasped the opportunity of displaying the usual in big headlines.

During the first year of our sport life in New Haven 152 of the Class were awarded the usual numeral Paul Switz.

In Sophomore year the crowning glory seemed to be the unavoidable way in which members of our Class won the various managerial competitions. For the first we had Henry Merrill announced as winner of the football competition only to be declared ineligible by the inevitable guillotine of the Dean's Office which gets some of us all of the time and all of us some of the time. Dick Goss, Waterbury Beau Brummel, was consequently given the position, and his able management of the only paying sport of the University deserves high praise. He is always most obliging and won the undying support of every one in the A. A. Office. With the close of the football season Dick probably gave a sigh of relief and tore up anything that had the likeness of a cursed football ticket.

Jake Grove.

Tom Farnsworth, who curiously enough comes from a warm climate, was elected hockey manager and, with the end of popularizing hockey, managed a creditable team and saw that the columns of the O.C.D. contained reams of publicity about his men. Lincoln Holmes was the member of our Class who can share with the unbeatable Kiphuth the swimming laurels. Steve Hartshorn has plugged away to make basketball something besides a "Cellar Team." Charlie Glock and Wan Balis managed the Wrestling and Boxing teams respectively and probably fumed over the lack of facilities for their particular sports.

Gene Pearce did a conscientious job with the Soccer Team or as it is officially titled—Yale University Association Football Team. John Dippel got the post of fencing manager and has been the man behind the scenes to a potent organization. Despite Coach Grasson's semi-humorous cry last fall for "more left-handed fencers," the sport is gaining rapidly in prestige and is something to be proud of managing. Jack Farnham, who combines the exclusiveness of a Phi Beta Kappa key with the rank of Second Lieutenant in the Field Artillery, was thus qualified for the managerial post in polo, an R.O.T.C. sport exclusively. He combined his scholastic ability with an understanding of military commands of one sort or another that won the competition. The rest of the managers, except for crew and baseball, are Sheff men, including Andy Kaul, track manager, who holds the only major office of the scientists. Crew and baseball are major sports which well deserve a paragraph of their own.

Johnny Garvey.

In the early days of Sophomore year eight or so of the Class started lugging oars, checking lists, jumping to obey "The Old Man," Ed Leader, or standing listening to the monotonous swish of skeleton oars through the slimy water of an indoor tank. In June two of these potential managers, John Briggs and Roger Damon, were picked to go to Gales Ferry with the Crew where they slaved three or four weeks longer. An ideal environment for the majority, Gales Ferry is the competitors' Hell. Few in college can appreciate what those two lucky or unlucky competitors go through, but it is perhaps the hardest of all the different towel-gathering jobs of the athletic department. Roger Damon, as every one knows, was the successful man, but John Briggs held a position which meant more responsibility than many of the minor managers themselves. Damon, in the most responsible managerial post of all, has borne his cares well, and since the publication of this book precedes the outcome of the crew season, it is fitting to express the hope that the sport may show as successful a season as its manager has shown ability.

Hoben and Switz at practice.

The social managerial honor seems to fall unquestioned to the baseball department. Here casual Sophomores typewrite nonchalantly, chase foul balls with a savoir-faire and, when elected, carry the cares of their office with an ease becoming a majordomo. Their efficiency seems to cease outside of the sacred precincts of the ball park or the office, for it has been almost impossible during our undergraduate days to learn anything about baseball in the public prints. Publicity apparently means scandal to the managers of "America's Greatest Sport." But, nevertheless, Gordie Brown, who conscientiously worked during the competition after an unfortunate result in the football managerial, has given us an attractive and interesting schedule during the past season.

Championship Soccer Team.

Although the few preceding words may seem to be a diversion from the subject of ATHLETICS, the work of running any department of Yale sports does involve effort with little recognition. In all the glamour of present-day sport emphasis, Yale managers deserve at least a passing comment on their performances. Unlike the majority of college undergraduate athletic posts, here those called managers really manage, and creditably. The policy of the A. A. in leaving some authority in student hands is one of the crowning glories of the College.

To return again to the theme ATHLETICS—the fall of Sophomore year finds names like Charlesworth, Crile, Decker, and Switz gracing the football stories. Decker scored the first points of any of our Class in the B. U. game of 1926, when he ran 50 yards for a score. Charlesworth started three games, while Crile was first string end against Brown. Three or four started in the first disastrous Maryland game, but Paul Switz was the only College Sophomore to play in the Harvard game. For the rest of our achievements the writer refers you to more complete and accurate files than a Class history for data. Football, while rescued from its temporary prominence during the scathing flashes of particular brilliance. Fred Sturdy, who, if there were no Sabe Carr, would be loud-heralded by Yale sport enthusiasts, was a most consistent performer. Few appreciate that his inevitable "Second Place won by F. H. Sturdy, 1929" may have been the necessary margin that Yale held that year over Harvard and Princeton, while in England he still left foreign soil far enough beneath him to annex another runner-up title. In Senior year Sturdy began to get some of the recognition due him. He can pole vault. W. Bradley, Barney Crile, Fuller Dean, and Ernie Schurman were the only other letter men.

Jake Grove and Jeff Sawyer were the only Freshman baseball men to graduate to a "Y" in 1927. Jeff pitched fourteen nine-inning games during the year and did mighty well. Hockey letters were won by Jim Brady and Alden Warner, another local boy. In the minor sports, Paul Fodder, and "Jim, Joe, or whatever-you-want-to-call-him" Cook played hard enough and long enough for basketball letters. In that sport your letter stands for good hard conscientious application. Sonny Hogen, Johnny Pope, and Walter Walsh got a swimmer's letter as a reward for consistent winning of criticism of overemphasis, is yet the most talked-of sport of the year. Consequently, a recurrence of that topic in these pages must be tolerated by those whose sporting interests may lie in other fields.

pound class, while Howard Adams and Pete Folger got polo insignia for waiting long enough in front of Yale Station for the R.O.T.C. truck every afternoon.

Before turning the retrospective lamp from the activities of our Sophomore year, this vivid description of certain members of the Class who performed in the Interfraternity Hockey League bears reprinting from the columns of the News. The game is one between the Dashing Diamond Disk Dribblers (Psi Judges' launch at Derby.

Upsilon) and the Purple and Gold Tornado Six (Chi Psi). The picture is too typical to be omitted from the sport archives of 1929. The exciting part says, "Hubbard [that's our Chauncey], one corner of the Diamond Team, dribbled around the ice, but not on skates——while Eddy, a Black and Blue player, wore his stick to a frazzle, but was unable to batter down Cork-leg Costikyan, a Dribbler."

Junior year sped by so rapidly that it is hard to tell when certain of our athletes were on or off Pro. Suffice it to say that the major item of the year was the "Case of Bruce Caldwell versus the awful reporter who found out that he had played before." The record of our Class that fall shows that Max Eddy, previously ineligible, Decker, and Charlesworth, later to be chosen All-American center, started the first football game. Johnny Garvey commenced his galloping march across goal lines with two touchdowns against Dartmouth, which resulted in a 19 to 0 win for Yale, and later one touchdown in the 14 to 0 defeat of Harvard in the Stadium. Ten men got letters, while four of the Ba— Scrub Team got "AYAs," Cookman, Bob Ward, and the Wright brothers. M. Hunter Eddy, of Middlebury, Vt., was elected captain for the following year. Here it is impossible to avoid mentioning again that it was Tad Jones' last year, that never again would his emphatic "How and the devil and Tom Walker—" echo across the field, that his habitual cigar would no more burn furiously with his team's setbacks or rest at ease with their inevitable comebacks.

Practice in the tank.

Major "Y's" were awarded sparsely among the many men of the Class who competed in athletics. Garvey, Grove, Loud, who pitched creditably last spring, and Sawyer got baseball letters. Bob Cushman, captain of crew for 1929, and Ben Brewster, who rowed two years on the Junior University Crew, were awarded crew letters. Crile, Jacob, Schurman, and Sturdy wear track insignia, and Jim Brady, P. Curtis, Fletcher, and Warner got a major hockey award.

With the hope of confining this article to the prescribed space the writer must again recommend the records of such publications as the Yale Daily News, the Banner and Pot Pourri, and the Alumni Weekly for more definite details of the athletic activity of Junior year.

Undergraduate Athletic Association.

In Senior year the most outstanding events at the time this publication goes to press are, first, the noteworthy performance of the Hockey Team, the surprising results which the Basketball Team showed by winning games by one point or more instead of losing them by one point, the prediction of a sport authority that Fred Sturdy will break Carr's record, which we hope and believe will happen, and the announcement of the award of major letters to three members of the Fencing Team, including Captain Frank Righeimer. The award is only the second in history and recognizes the winning of the National Dueling Swords Championship of America.

Football was rather disappointing for our last year in college, but the team got more out of the sport than any other group since our entrance into college at least. There was a feeling this year, noticeable for the first time, of wanting to play football for the fun of it and not making it a disagreeable task. Of course the alumni and Yale supporters may lament the modern undergraduate and all of that, but the policy of "Athletics for All" certainly benefits when over 105 fellows can get as much fun out of football as was evident last fall. The season as a whole was rather average, but the loss of two or three of the major games overemphasizes every one's impression of the entire aspect. The Harvard game was truly enough as good an exhibition of high school football as it has ever been our privilege to watch, but the courage and spirit of the team as evinced in the Princeton game and in the early season was something to remember. Charlesworth, Crile, Decker, Eddy, Garvey, Hubbard, and Loud got major letters. The record of the Second Team was rather good. Out of six games, five resulted in victories, including a 34 to 12 defeat of Harvard (green head guards and bright jerseys) and a tie with Princeton, 0 to 0. Soccer turned out an unusually strong team, with men previously mentioned on the All-College Team. The proximity of the remaining events of Senior year to the time when we will no longer be undergraduates of this great college must necessarily serve to keep fresh in mind the concluding athletic history of 1929.

This rambling began with a discussion of personnel. Let it so end. There has come a man to Yale since our stay here who has done much and is eager to do more to unite the undergraduate to the Athletic Department. His invitation to leading undergraduates, managers or no, to discuss what to them seems vital to their fellow-students, what they want and what they think they ought to get from the A. A., has done much to dissolve the feeling that the authorities really think they know it all and do not regard the undergraduate point of view in any way. Jack Cates, if we may neglect for the time being his title, is a distinct addition to the Athletic Department, and it is the hope of the writer that he may continue and increase the good he has already wrought.

In conclusion, may I say that a history of athletics is an extremely broad topic. If any feel slighted that their names have been omitted, or that their sport has been neglected, let them remember that the writer is more or less in the position of non-athlete writing about athletes. As Dr. Samuel Johnson said, "A woman's preaching is like a dog walking on its hind legs. It is not well done; but you are surprised to find it done at all." And so am I.

The Glee Club.

MUSIC AND THE CLASS OF 1929

IN looking back over the musical activities of the Class of 1929 one is impressed with the vast change in this field of extra-curricula disport that has taken place in four short years. The change, due to the efforts of Marshall Bartholomew, '07 S., has been of the sort to remove Yale music from a slipshod amateur basis to one decidedly more interesting and worth while to the undergraduate. Our Class has been very fortunate to be on hand to take part in this morphosis. In brief, it lies in the fact that during the past four years the Yale Glee Club has endeavored to raise its standard of performance and musical selection to the extent that it has become acceptable to a music-loving public as well as to the alumni of the University. In this way, the deficits which have hitherto faced the club at all too frequent intervals have been minimized, and the opportunities for extensive travel have become more numerous. The European trip of the summer of 1928 is an outstanding example of this. The change has been criticized by some as being a move to rob the alumni of their familiar songs, but such is not the case, as the program of the 1928-29 trip readily shows. The alumni for the most part seemed pleased with the new Glee Club endeavors.

During the Christmas holidays of 1925-26 a few members of our little group created a slight disruption, national in character, as members of the Yale Glee and Banjo Clubs which took a trip in the Middle West. It was on this trip that for the first time some members realized the devastating and truly phenomenal possibilities of the jongleur life. I recall with great delight the hilarity of such men as "Sancho Panza" Griswold, Ned Mulligan, and Cotter Conway. Incidents of rare import occurred which shall ever be preserved in the minds of those who at the time were mere Freshmen—and totally unable to think (or walk?) in a straight line. That year the inconveniences which were piled on our unsuspecting heads were such as to make our blood boil in reminiscence. When the train had pulled out of the New Haven Station and was going at a clip which forbade leaping off, the management informed the Freshman delegation, consisting of four, that it could occupy one section of the Pullman car. This section, of course, was directly over the square wheel. Space keeps me from damning to a greater extent that archaic management. I must say, however, that our retaliation took form in various ways, one of which, and perhaps the niftiest, was the stealing of the leader's pitch pipe and the manager's bottle of bitters (an apéritif of which he was exceeding fond).

*Barty and the

The Christmas trip in Sophomore year showed a great increase in the number of twenty-niners, and the national disruption assumed even greater proportions. Sophomore year seemed to fill our classmates with a new confidence. The Glee Club headed south towards the fields of waving corn and bourbon, where colonels and mummies had planned for extensive yuletide hospitalities. Gillespie was an outstanding addition to the '29 roster on this tour. It was on this jaunt that the field of feminine pulchritude below the Mason-Dixon Line had its edges trimmed. It would be unfair to disclose the identities of the various engagements that broke down under the vigorous initiative of the then young and naïve social lion, but it seems imperative to record in print the prowess of Gillespie at such an early age. The Class will do well to watch him in action when time and place permit. This was the year during which New Orleans had two Mardi gras. One was held by the Yale Glee Club in honor of itself. It will be hard to forget the balmy enjoyment of that southern trip. The balm was plentiful.

The Quartet.

Junior year provided another middle western trip, but it differed perceptibly from that of Freshman year. St. Louis was among the stopping places of the club. In all truth, St. Louis almost stopped the club forever. The people of that city will go down in Glee Club history as saints. Santa Claus himself must have come back to St. Louis after his round of the world to finish his Christmas festivities. Forgive any mix-up on the word "saint" which has been used above. I only now realized the name of the city. It must be inserted at this point in the history of Yale music that this trip was the first on which the Yale Banjo Club did not go. It was missed by many and always will be by those who revere the "goode aulde days." A. B. Ashforth, Jr., better known as "Splash," was very much in prominence during the St. Louis visit—at this time he sang with the Glee Club, but his histrionic talents (which he employed with diabolical effort among the débutante set) have removed him to the inferior art of the drama. Van Griggs, erstwhile soloist of the Class of 1929, showed absolute proof of his pleasure by being eligible for the second bass quartet which distinguished itself in the lovely Maffitt homestead on West Pine Boulevard. The entire trip of our Junior year was unique. The start of the trip in Wilmington, where the club sang with unaccustomed gusto, and the Titian haze which hovered about St. Louis will remain indelibly on even the minds of the Sheff men who were along.

The European trip presented an entirely different problem to the members of 1929 who had become frequent in the lists of those who sing. By undaunted effort and utmost facility, our classmates succeeded in cementing relations between these United States and one country after the other. It is a shame that the entire Class could not have been audience to bits of savoir and social nuance that created a profound love in the hearts of Europe for 1929 and all it stands for. In all seriousness, the European trip was an achievement of which one may well be proud, for it was the initial step in quest of a solidarity of sympathy between the American song-loving students and those across the sea. Too much credit cannot be given Mr. Bartholomew for the efforts which made the trip into a reality.

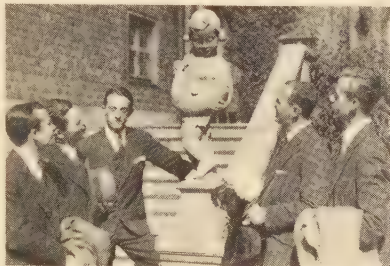

Splash.

European trip.

The Christmas trip this year was another triumph, if we do say so ourselves, and it may be said this year that the Glee Club left as great a number of broken hearts and derbies in its trail as ever before. The influenza incapacitated some of the singers, but were they downhearted?—Nay, nay—the others settled down, breathed a little deeper, and opened the back doors of the respective auditoriums with their tuneful blats just as if all of their men had been there. As Morris Watkins, beloved substitute for Barty, would say, “Gentlemen, this is the grim truth, and not a coach’s talk between the halves; there is a big critic in the house and he loves us plenty." The astounding solo work of J. vanB. Griggs was a godsend to the shattered club. He kept the morale on an even keel by the manner in which he kept the "choir's" gambling instincts predominant during the first half of each concert. All this sounds very peculiar, but I can assure you that if it had not been a gamble every night as to whether Griggs would remember his words, the whole thing would have become quite mechanical after our first few appearances. This trip was a marked one, too, because of the hunt team which represented the Glee Club behind the Moore County Hounds. The achievement in this instance lay in the fact that all four of the members of the team—

Cementing relations.

Messrs. Henning, Scoville, Rathborne, and the author—were able to return the horses to the man from whom they had been hired. Another point of interest in passing—the entire club were given the opportunity to fly in the air (gratis, mind you) through the courtesy of the Command-aire Company of Little Rock, Ark. The stability of these planes is now a proven thing, as Robert E. Spiel was among those who flew.

Let us now turn our attention to the unorganized music of our Class. It is here that we find the source of our Class geniality and merriment. Who among us would not give one "git" to be back in our old rooms at three in the morning to be awakened by discordant screams from P. Ring Court or the Boy Scout Troop of Calliope. The Class of '29 has done much to revive the campus singing of the aughty something classes. The Whiffenpoofs have shown a very pleasing regularity in their appearances in the Freshman Oval and have renewed the bacchanalian levity in their social intercourse which was woefully missing in the classes ahead of them. The fraternity singing in our Class has been loud and fine in its simple cleanliness. It was during our reign that the lewd cadenzas once flung at Psi U came to a sudden halt. Very rarely do we now hear the notes of one song in particular polluting the clear, dry air of New Haven. When we do, it comes from the smoke-filled rooms of our Class toughies who will probably take their post-graduate courses at Sing Sing anyhow.

Under the able leadership of Jerry Downing the Yale Band has matured into a formidable organization. The caliber of the band has improved tremendously through the work of 1929. Every one of us will think back with a thrill at the way our boys outblew the bands which visited New Haven during our last year. We shall hear from these men who arduously practiced on their bass horns while in college. We have produced a flock of embryo Sousa's whose hearts and lungs will "do us proud." As much can be said for Harold Fletcher, who has so ably handled the Yale Orchestra.

Jim Henning.

What is so wonderful about the musical interests that forever will linger in the members of our Class is that at reunion times we will again have the pleasure of singing and supping together. Voices which in reality will never improve will sound sweeter to us as the years go by. We will call our son's attention to a classmate and benignly tell him that there stands the greatest voice that Yale ever produced. The voice, if called on to exhibit its prowess, will wheeze and crack through the old songs, but we will never notice its washboard qualities; it will sound like the dulcet tones of Pan to us, until we notice that the son is about to go into a fit of apoplectic agony from the mirth which has welled up in his more sophisticated breast.

DRAMATICS

Dramatic Association.

DRAMATICS

THE reminiscences of four years of dramatics at Yale in which the Class of '29 have participated cannot possibly be complete or exhaustive. The historian has therefore limited himself to a sketch of facts, events, and personalities identified with dramatics during those four years.

The histrionic abilities of the renowned Class of '29 did not long remain hidden to the world. Even in the early months of Freshman year these latent powers were brought to light through the medium of Nick Moseley's famous presentation of Plautus' "Mostellaria." After a succession of whirlwind trials and equally cyclonic rehearsals under the inimitable direction of E. Montillion Woolley, Sprague Hall resounded to a clatter of bare feet and to the sonorous Latin sentences of Plautus. The audience was baffled at the ingenuity with which the actors disguised the meaning of the poet's words. Only now and again when the familiar tones of a pornographic passage struck the ears of the audience did they seem to appreciate the beauty of the great poet. Perhaps the most appreciative were Mr. Moseley's fair charges from Albertus Magnus, safely ensconced in the inviolability of the balcony.

It was thus that the Class first gained renown in the world of dramatics. Among the illustrious names which must be mentioned in connection with this play that of G. T. Ashforth, who took the part of the slave, Tranio, stands out especially. His performance showed a great deal of virility, and all agreed that his acting proved him to be a man of fine parts. The costumes were a bit scanty, but this seemed only to have added to the success of the performance. Among the others to star in this initial triumph were F. G. Brown, A. R. Connelly, A. B. Ashforth, Jr., W. A. Aiken, K. Boocock, H. A. Long, and C. E. Brown.

With the close of the football season, there were announcements of trials for Dramat. Dwight Hall was filled with eager and confident Freshmen hoping to go on the celebrated Christmas tour. This year the play chosen for the trip was "Out o' Luck," by Tom Cushing (Yale 1902), a rollicking comedy of the war, with incidental songs by Cole Porter (Yale 1913). But unfortunately only two were doomed to survive these strenuous and eventful trials. A. B. Walker was chosen for the part of Lieutenant Hayes and L. A. Williams, Jr., for that of Phil Stewart, a doughboy in the American Expeditionary Forces.

The play was taken to Bridgeport, New York, Albany, Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Washington, and Wilkes Barre.

It was a play rarely suited to the abilities of the Dramat, and, needless to say, was received with unusual enthusiasm everywhere. Its first successes were repeated at Prom time.

About this time several new additions were made to the ranks of the Dramat, additions which later turned out to form part of the bone and muscle of this great organization. Jenkins, Moorhead, J. C. Brady, Boocock, Goss, and Wyckoff were invited to become managerial aids to the business board. The ranks were soon thinned by the withdrawal of Goss, whose preëminent track abilities absorbed too much of his time, and by Boocock's sudden reversal of his field, for he now devoted his entire efforts to the histrionic side.

In March Osborn, the sacred and ancestral home of the Dramat, was demolished and the Dramat was forced to temporary quarters in the old Psyc Lab opposite Mory's. Here preparations commenced for the spring play, Basil Davenport's masterly adaptation of "The Oresteia" of Æschylus. For the first time the histrionic abilities of the Class of '29 seemed to gain recognition. The sacred walls of Dwight shook with the declamation of the eager contestants, and finally, amidst a cloud of Murad smoke, nine triumphant faces emerged. It was a victory for '29. A. B. Ashforth, H. Miller, Leighton, and A. B. Walker were chosen as part of the chorus for the Agamemnon, while G. T. Ashforth, Babcock, P. Jones, Ruiz, and Stokes were among those chosen for the chorus of the Choephori. All again combined to take the part of Furies in the Eumenides, a sexless group of monsters who dogged poor Orestes to his death.

Rehearsals were strenuous. The indoor cage resounded to the howls and groans of the Furies, and rehearsals invariably had to be called off because the clouds of dust soon arose as a fog to impair the vision of the coughing actors. We moved out to the Bowl where the atmosphere was rarer. The peaceful quiet of these balmy spring afternoons would be broken by piercing and horrible howls and thundering sentences hurled down from the topmost rim of the vast amphitheatre. It was a favorite trick of Monty's! During these anxious days the poor business heelers snared by Hinkle's cunning were set to work cutting helmets, greaves, swords, and countless other Greek paraphernalia, and their tortured groans emerging from the Psyc Lab could be heard far into the night. Orestes was another triumph for Woolley.

In the fall of 1926 the Dramat acquired its permanent offices in the University Theatre building, the gift of Mr. Harkness. The play chosen for the Christmas trip was a revival of "Out o' Luck," which had proved such a hit the preceding year, for the alumni of the West had heard of its success and begged the opportunity of seeing it. The play was recast in accordance with new trials. G. T. Ashforth was chosen for the part of Phil Stewart and Boocock for that of Lieutenant Hayes. Ashforth, unfortunately, was suddenly taken sick with an attack of appendicitis, and his post was filled by L. A. Williams. The success of the play was even greater than that of the previous year. Cleveland, Milwaukee, Chicago, Indianapolis, and Detroit all were greatly pleased, and the alumni received the club with the greatest warmth.

With only four weeks to prepare a new offering for the Prom audiences, the Dramat set to work immediately after vacation in casting and rehearsing "Bold Bad Men." This farce was the work of William B. Kip, 1926, then taking graduate courses in English and who had previously worked under Woolley and with the Playercraftsmen. Once again the Dramat had found a play that fitted into its policy of producing the creative work of Yale men. "Bold Bad Men" was given three times at Prom, and its success was triumphant. It was later given in New York and Waterbury. In this farce-melodrama more new talent emerged from our Class. C. H. Taylor, who took the part of the sheriff, had quite a long rôle, one which he played with remarkable success, while R. E. Houston, Jr., was in his element as Euchre-Deck.

Sophomore year would be far from complete without mention of Alpha Delta Phi's production of "The Spanish Tragedie," by Thomas Kyd. In keeping with their praiseworthy custom of reviving Elizabethan plays which have not been given in modern times, they chose this year a "tragedy of blood," a true tragedy of Elizabethan times and quite appropriately presented in the Elizabethan fashion, using only one set for all the scenes. This was

"Bold Bad Men."

Hunt Miller's first great triumph. As Heironimo he gave a performance quite beyond all expectation, a performance which reached truly Elizabethan heights, when, with an agonized gesture, he tore out his tongue and hurled it upon the boards. Henning as Horatio allowed himself to be hanged most convincingly, while Stokes made a most macabre revenge.

With the coming of spring came trials for the Commencement play, another ambitious undertaking for Monty, for the play was to be Shakespeare's "Coriolanus," under ordinary circumstances perhaps the dulllest of all Shakespeare's plays. But Monty, like a magician, plied his shears, and, lo and behold, emerged a play which was destined to be one of his greatest successes. His theory was to make the mob the motivating power of the play and by quick-moving and dramatic crowd effects to give the play the vitality it otherwise lacked. The result surely gave proof of Woolley's genius as a director, for he accomplished what seemed the impossible.

Just as the rehearsals began to get well under way there came a thunderbolt—Woolley's reappointment as an instructor in the English Department had been refused by the Corporation in spite of the recommendations of the English Department, and Woolley handed in his resignation to the Dramat Association.

It was a blow such as the Dramat had never received. Monty Woolley had been with the Dramat for nine years, during which time he had raised the standard of their productions to such a degree that the professional theatre world had looked upon his productions with the greatest admiration. There was no question about it. Monty Woolley had made the Dramat all it was to-day. He had stimulated undergraduate interest in dramatics, had coached fraternity plays, the Playcraftsmen, and all undergraduate dramatic work, and now he was reaping his reward.

"I have my stamp collection."

The undergraduates were stirred to the highest pitch of righteous indignation, philippics choked the News office, insurgent students could be seen in groups around the campus, and one would hear the name of the Corporation, Professor Baker, Big Money, taken in vain. It was a time of crisis for the Dramat. Who can forget the great mass meetings in Lampson, the parades, the convocations, the petitions signed by hundreds of students? Alas, all to no avail!

Monty gladly consented to finish his production of "Coriolanus," and all the actors returned to their rehearsals, now being held behind the U Club, with an increased purpose, while Don Campbell, a friend of Monty and an old Dramat man, began the creation of a unique group of costumes. The success of the play was extraordinary and the pleasure of the actors further increased by the praises of Walter Hampden, who had come up to see the production and who was prevailed upon to come to the greenroom.

Among those who preëminently distinguished themselves were Miller, who as Junius Brutus gave a masterly performance, and Aiken and Taylor, who as the two servants of Aufdius added a vastly amusing bit of comedy. Others in this production were Stokes and Houston, who took the parts of Roman citizens, A. B. Ashforth, who was the ædile, Leighton, a Roman senator, G. T. Ashforth, a messenger, Cobey, a Roman soldier, and A. B. Walker and L. A. Williams, who were Volscian guards. Last but not least must come recognition of the sterling performance of Assistant Manager W. P. Jenkins, who pinch hit for the second ædile, a versatile gentleman!

After "Coriolanus" many more new members were added to the association. The complete list now consisted of the following men: A. B.

Ashforth, G. T. Ashforth, Boocock, J. C. Brady, Houston, Jenkins, Leighton, Miller, Moorhead, Stokes, Taylor, Walker, and Williams.

In October, 1927, Douglas Walter Ross, English Shakespear-ean and classical actor, was appointed as coach to take Woolley's place.

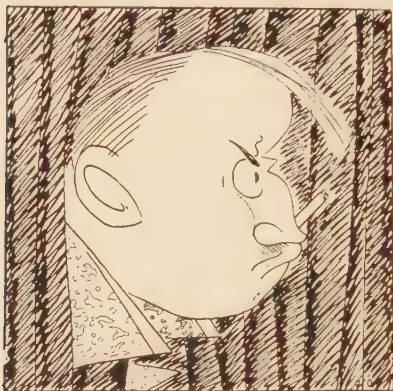

Was a triumphant success.

In November the trials were held for the Christmas play. The play chosen was "This Woman Business," a comedy by Ben Levy. Unfortunately, the cast was made up entirely of Seniors, with the exception of three Sophomores. Boocock, however, and G. T. Ashforth were destined to go along as understudies and prompters. The play was given at Albany, Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, and Washington, and seemed to be quite a success. The same play was repeated at the Prom. At this time President Bingham was forced to be absent, and a substitute was found in the person of A. B. Ashforth to take his part, that of the butler, Trent. After the Prom the play was taken to Waterbury, where it was given for the last time.

In February, 1928, the election of officers resulted in the following appointments: A. B. Ashforth, president, W. P. Jenkins, manager, J. C. Brady, secretary, and Moorhead, publicity manager.

In March the fraternity of Alpha Delta Phi put on its annual play, and this year it was quite exceptional. The play was Marlowe's "The Jew of Malta." Hunt Miller played the Jew with most convincing ferocity and bloodthirstiness, while his slave, Ithamore, was most ably taken by H. C. Downing. Stokes as the lewd friar shocked his heretofore unsuspecting friends, and Henning shone forth in his usual becoming white tights.

The spring of Junior year brought the Macbeth episode, a charming little farce replete with humor and tense situations. The affair may best be described as a play within a play, for the plot of the action surrounding the actual production of the tragedy formed a brilliant backing of comi-pathos which joined the whole month's work into an enthralling drama. Let us run through a few of the scenes, catching the various leading characters at the height of their achievements. Positions!—Lights! —Stand By!—CURTAIN!!

The curtain rises rather uncertainly and reveals a group of elderly men seated around a table facing two or three younger men, apparently undergraduates. They are all talking at once and only a few disjointed words may be caught: "Richard Third—Romeo and Juli—Macbeth—Venice preserved—Now curiously enough—Splendid, bully—Thurfore—The Corporation says—alumni won't like—Julius Cæsar—never read it—" This keeps on for some five minutes, then the group gradually dissolves, muttering and shaking heads, until there is only one man left on the stage who repeats petulantly, "I should like awf'ly to p'rdeooce Macbeth"—Curtain to denote lapse of a few days.

The scene this time opens on the greenroom of the Yale Theatre. Some thirty men are lounging around on chairs or the floor in dejected attitudes. A blue haze of tobacco smoke hangs overhead contributing to the discomfort of the stuffy atmosphere. Some of the occupants are obviously asleep, while others are whispering in a bored way to frowning companions. In the center of the room is a chair, and around this four short figures are cavorting and shrieking hideously. "Dubbull dubull, toill, and trubull, eeeyaaanh, weeyooooow, heh, heh, heh!" Suddenly they break into a frantic dance, while the one in blue silk shirt sleeves and ribboned glasses marks time: "Tiddy-iddy-um - bum - bum ——— tiddy - iddy - um - DIDDY-bum." Startled gasps escape through concealing fingers, and there is a horrified silence as the performers halt and gaze around with aggrieved looks. The gentleman of the blue sleeves whirls about: "Cahnt I heve quieht? I rilly cahnt go on with this reheahsal y' know if there isn't quieht." A man behind the table at the window leans forward timidly and murmurs a few words. The other looks blank: "Trials? Trials—Oh, yes, yes, yes. They shall have trials. I'm sarry we heven't bean able to get mar th'n this scene done to-day, baht you're all nice boys, and we will need a lot of soldiers!"

Black-out

Our next scene has for its locality the stage of the theatre. Rehearsals have been ranted through for several weeks, including the two weeks of trial rehearsals in which every one got a chance at almost every part, except the men whom we now see stalking grimly across the boards. It has been quite a feat to reach the final dress rehearsal. Now the actors are preparing themselves for their final entry into the "white light district." The curtain rises at precisely nine thirty-three, revealing the famous "Baked Alaska" scene, of which "Pop," the doorkeep, said, "It has been worth being a doorkeep all my life to have seen this one scene, see?" The actors shouted through successfully and the usual semi-black-out followed. This device of the semi-black-out was used throughout the play with invariable success. Ordinarily neither the audience nor the scenery shifters can see what is going on, but with the new system the shifters can see exactly where to put things and the audience can check up on them, which puts it in the same position as in France, where it is called the "assistance." However, even under these conditions, it was with some surprise that we noted, after the lights flashed on, that the actors in the new scene were somewhat impeded by the "Baked Alaska," which had descended and wrapped itself around their feet. After this had been remedied, things went pretty well for the next couple of hours, until we came to the "dead king's scene," in which the spot and characters had a very pretty game of tag. The adjustment of the lights was finally worked out to perfection by using only the work lights for most of the scenes. The result of this was that all unnecessary shadows were eliminated, and there was no need for colored bulbs, which are, needless to say, more expensive than the plain and don't really give as much light. This rehearsal ended quite early—in the morning.

Three of these early morning practices and the public was ready for the production. It is hard to give any short impression of the events of the three nights which followed, and perhaps it will be best merely to jot down a number of the high lights in a rather disjointed manner. Looking back one seems to remember:

Coming home.

A performance starting exactly on time with four of the usual ten actors present for the opening of the second scene. The wounded soldier harangues his fellows, who answer in chorus for the absent nobles. The latter sweep on at intervals during the rest of the scene, taking their proper places and resuming the lines "as though to the manner born."

Actors passing through an arch into the castle and appearing on the other side in full view of the audience where there has not been time to erect the customary masonry——

G. Ashforth, Banquo, holding a wavering "flat" from sailing out into the spectators, while his cue to enter from the other side of the stage rings in his ears——

Director Ross rushing on the stage in the mob scenes and so astonishing the poor army that it appears truly bewildered at the proper time ——

Highland flings relieving the monotony by bursting out where the usual trumpet call was expected and vice versa——

One of our most versatile actors, who played the part of lord, king, and servant, playing another of dead soldier so convincingly that if we had not known he was dead we could have sworn he wasn't——the trumpet braying insistently while the lights flash on and off, disclosing an empty "Baked Alaska." In the wings a few soldiers are confidently making noises like "leafy bows" being thrown down. Finally, the entry being triumphantly prepared, H. Miller, Macduff, rushes on representing in person Macduff, Malcolm, Siward, and several nobles, followed by three soldiers. He commands, questions himself, replies bravely, agrees with what he has said, and exits ——

Bud Ashforth, who heroically gave up the part of dead soldier in order not to interfere with his duties as president, rushing around holding up scenery, making noises like a castle awakening, an army being defeated, a temple-haunting Martlet making his pendent bed and procreant cradle, and many other useful little jobs such as always seem to be the president's privilege.

Among others, besides Miller and G. Ashforth, to earn everlasting fame from this great production are Connelly, who played Angus, A. B. Walker, Cobey, and L. A. Williams, murderers, McCandless, a lord, Sleath, a messenger, and Graham and Sklar, who were witches.

Douglas W. Ross.

In spite of many rough spots, "Macbeth" was received with great enthusiasm by the Commencement audiences, which was due perhaps almost entirely to the intensity with which the actors played their parts.

Upon looking behind the scenes of this production, a production which entailed so many sets and complicated properties, we are suddenly aware of the invaluable services of the production board. Green and Hershey, with their assistants, W. G. Anderson and Sleath, are entirely responsible for the success of the production side and deserve those praises which so often remain unsung.

In the fall of Senior year the Playcraftsmen, whose ranks had already been well filled by members of the Class, undertook the production of three plays, whose authors it so happened were all Seniors. The previous productions of the Playcraftsmen we are forced to pass over. Washington Dodge's play, "Pegasus Stumbles," produced in the spring of Junior year, was the only promise of creative genius worthy of note up to this time.

The Thursday and Friday evenings of the Harvard game "The Road to Venice," by Balliett, "War is Kind," by Paine, and "Nightingale," by G. T. Ashforth, were presented. The success of these three plays, in spite of the limited facilities of the Playcraftsmen, was most unexpected and not only did ample credit to President Connelly, but was an unmistakable indication of what high quality creative work Yale is still capable of producing.

In the fall of 1928 the Dramatic Association was fortunate enough to secure the services of James Light, director of the Provincetown Players, intimate friend of Eugene O'Neill and producer of many of his plays.

The play chosen for the Christmas trip was "White Wings," a delightful and fantastic satire by Philip Barry (Yale 1918), who had recently gained such well-deserved praise for his plays, "Paris Bound" and "Holiday," now playing in New York. "White Wings" had been produced by Winthrop Ames in New York in the fall of 1926, but, in spite of the most superlative praise of the critics, was withdrawn after a three weeks' run.

The Monday after the Harvard game trials were held and by the end of the week a singularly good cast had been chosen:

Major Philip E. Inch : A. R. Connelly, 1929

Mr. Ernest Inch : H. Miller, 1929

Mrs. Fanny Inch : T. M. Brown, Jr., 1930

This year the Dramat was attempting the most extensive tour in its history. In 1927 the Christmas trip had taken in the cities of the East. This Christmas we were to play in the Middle West and the Northwest. The itinerary was as follows:

Cleveland, December 21, Chicago, December 22, St. Paul, December 26, Minneapolis, December 27, Cincinnati, December 31.

University Theatre.

Among the memories of the hurried days of rehearsals are some which would be difficult to forget. With the arrival of the costumes came a death blow! The horse, Josie, which the costumers had promised, was a wreck. He resembled the horse which had pulled the first covered wagon. He was literally in shreds. With this tragic discovery all the wheels of the great organization were set in motion. Heelers were sent to scour the cities of the Atlantic states without success. One heeler returned after forty-eight hours without sleep to say that "there wasn't a horse left in New York." The original Josie had been prostituted to the Greenwich Village Follies and was now a resident of Detroit. A second heeler returned from Philadelphia with a carcass which turned out to be that of a mule. Calamity stared us in the face, for the horse was the keynote of the play. There was nothing to do but to make Josie! Again all the hidden springs of talent were tapped and finally with herculean efforts the carcass was assembled, the head strung, and with a shout of triumph Josie was lifted into a taxicab and rushed to the station two minutes before the train pulled out. It was an epic!

As luck would have it, an epidemic of influenza was ravaging the Middle West, with the sad result that many of the houses were not filled. Yet everywhere we went we were received with that warmth and hospitality so characteristic of the Middle West. Luncheons, dinners, parties of all kinds, were given for us by alumni and friends. In Chicago the many kindnesses of the alumni were beyond all expectations, and suitable words of appreciation are quite lacking. And finally, the welcome given us in St. Paul and Minneapolis is a memory which we all shall not soon forget.

The trip would be far from complete without the mention of those who starred and some of those now historical lines which they spoke, words which to those who took a part in the trip will long remain unforgettable.

To pick any single star would be impossible, so very well were all the parts filled. Miller was perfect as Mr. Inch. Who can forget such lines as "No Waste Products," "Speak to the Women," "How do you Do." Again his unsuccessful attempt at suicide, resulting in a sparrow's death, and finally his pathetic "Strawberries!" G. Ashforth as Archie played his part extremely well. It was a long and difficult rôle, but one for which Ashforth was perfectly suited and upon which the success of the play hinged. Connelly as the Major, that pompous individual who was responsible "for the fact that 5000 horses marched on Antietam without leaving a single trace," was quite inimitable. His examination of Clyde Sims, the famous scene where he punctures the tires, and his great line, "It was nothing," never failed to throw the house into fits of laughter. Downing's performance as Kit Canari could not have been duplicated.

The extraordinary way in which he got off the "scorcher," and his memorable line, "It's all right, I have my stamp collection," were enough to make any one man famous. A. B. Ashforth as Charlie Todd had two great lines, "Gasoline and Erl" and "Oh, Mrs. Inch, Placket!" Finally, A. B. Walker made a fine Slopo, and, again, as stage manager deserves recognition for having perfectly fulfilled one of the most thankless and difficult of all theatrical offices.

As to the production department, for the construction of the scenery, the assembling of "props" of which such a great number were necessary for "White Wings," again for the costumes and lighting, the untiring and invaluable work of Green and Hershey was entirely responsible.

For the Prom it was decided to revive "White Wings." Three performances were planned, Saturday evening, February 2, and Tuesday afternoon and evening, February 5. Slight changes were made in the cast. A. B. Ashforth changed to the part of Major Inch, which Connelly's forced absence left open, while Walker replaced Ashforth as Mr. Todd. The change did not seem to impair the success of the show, which was received by the Prom audiences with even keener enthusiasm than it had met during the Christmas trip.

On Friday, the 9th of February, the last performance of "White Wings" was given at Waterbury. In the first act when Josie made his exit it was through part of the scenery and like Josie's exit so this night was a fitting finish, for never had an audience enjoyed the play more, and all the actors were at their best. "White Wings" and the many rich associations which surround the play will always remain, I am sure, one of the happiest memories of the four years at Yale.

And so the story of the Class in Dramatics has drawn to an end. The four years which our Class has seen at Yale have been a critical period for the Dramat. We have seen Osborn, the Psyc Lab, Dwight Hall, all periodic homes of the Dramat, pass away. We have seen the Dramat through perhaps the greatest loss in its existence, the loss of Woolley, and again through two more critical years under temporary directors. It is to the unending loyalty and faith of its members that the Dramat owes its untarnished and unique reputation.

FORENSICS

FORENSICS

DEBATING is on the decline at Yale." The acceptance of this statement, one is lead to believe, depends, as does that similar platitude concerning drinking so often uttered by one of Yale's leading authorities, upon which side of the bar we lean. It is undoubtedly true that all the glamour of brass rails, painted mirrors, free lunches, and large audiences has disappeared. But is it not safe to say that a great deal of bootleg speaking goes on, slyly, behind closed doors? It is an insidious thing, this public speaking, something which all our reformers, with the best of intentions, cannot entirely wipe out. Every year a score or so of incorrigible speakers enter Yale whose thirst for forensics disregards all established laws and who cannot be appeased except by participating in debates, oratorical contests, or such organizations as the Liberal Club and the Speaking Club. It is these few incorrigibles who keep public speaking at Yale from being entirely a thing of the past.

Let us trace a group of these platform-thirsters who entered Yale in the Class of 1929.

In the fall of their Freshman year they initiated for the first time a permanent organization known as the Freshman Debating Club which thrives to this day. There were some sixty-five members enrolled, forty of whom were actively interested in debating. Rollin Osterweis was their president, and Win Leighton and Bill Mangold were the vice-president and secretary. No one who was not present will ever know the real fury of debate which took place between the "Wall," headed by Lynn Williams, and the "Court," led by H. L. English. These two divisions of the club held weekly debates represented by teams from each side. Then the floor was opened for free-for-all discussion, which often sounded like the House of Representatives in the old days of its glory.

Later on came various outside debates with near-by prep schools. In the first of these Rollin Osterweis, Bill Mangold, and Alan Lauchheimer defended the honor of Yale by trouncing Choate School by a decision of 3 to 0. The very next evening A. B. Clark, Win Leighton, and Ken Gillespie chalked up a victory over Hotchkiss School. Later in the spring Taft handed the club its only setback, when a team composed of E. E. Ashley, 3d, Harold Taylor, and Osterweis went down to a noble defeat. This left the club with a fairly high batting average, which could not be increased, due to the difficulty of finding opponents.

In April the club offered to its members an elimination tournament, in which some thirty-two competed. The winners, who were awarded silver loving cups, were Harold Taylor and Alphonse Kenison, who defeated Irky Babb and Win Leighton in a spirited finale.

Debating Association.

Members of 1929 who took part in Varsity debates during Freshman and Sophomore years were limited to Bill Gaud and Win Leighton. But Junior year saw Bob Houston, Tom Vance, and Mac MacIntyre added to the ranks of Varsity debaters, and with Senior year others blossomed out, among whom were I. N. P. Stokes, 2d, and Huntington Miller, who, with Tom Vance, took the platform for the first time against a formidable adversary, Oxford, and acquitted themselves admirably. This debate will stand out as perhaps the most important to the Class of 1929. But not to be forgotten is the famous Al Smith debate, which drew an audience which exceeded the program supply by some 300 and packed Lampson to the doors. Again, there was the Mussolini debate with Harvard, when Tom Vance, Bob Houston, and Mac MacIntyre were in constant fear of bullet shots from a packed house of anti-Fascists.

At no time in 1929's four years of debating did Yale suffer an unsuccessful season. Our teams always won more than half of their debates and ranked anywhere from fourth to a tie for first in the Eastern Intercollegiate Debating League, which has a membership of nine universities.

Sophomore year saw 1929 taking active interest in the affairs of the University Debating Association, when Win Leighton became assistant manager. The following year he was promoted to manager, and Bill Mangold was elected secretary, although he did not come back to college to fill this position. During Senior year Leighton became president, Bill Gaud vice-president, and Bob Houston member-at-large on the executive committee.

Delta Sigma Rho, the national honorary forensic society, also claimed its share from 1929. Win Leighton was elected in Freshman year and became secretary in Junior year. At this time four members of 1929 were initiated: Tom Vance, Mac MacIntyre, Bob Houston, who became Senior president, and Bill Gaud, who was made secretary. Huntington Miller and I. N. P. Stokes, 2d, received the gold key of Delta Sigma Rho in Senior year.

Another honor bestowed on debaters is the Thacher Prize for extemporaneous speaking. This was received in Sophomore year by Win Leighton and in Junior year by Vance, MacIntyre, and Houston, and in Senior year an award was again given to Vance.

Probably the most significant events, with regard to individual speakers, of the forensic history at Yale are the annual oratorical contests. The Sophomore contest, known as the Parker Dickson Buck Memorial contest, was won by Robert Emmett Houston, Jr., whose subject, "Did America Win the World War?" was in keeping with the patriotic tone of this occasion. Honorable mention was given to S. W. Graham.

The TenEyck Prize for Juniors was won by Erwin Hall Steif, with Bob Houston receiving honorable mention.

The Senior event for the DeForest Medal and the Townsend Premiums brought forth an unusually large competition. The winner was Bob Houston, with his oration, "The Significance of American Ascendancy," and Stokes received honorable mention with "War and the Modern World." Those receiving the Townsend Premiums were: Winslow Leighton, Huntington Miller, Erwin Steif, and Tom Vance.

The only other oratorical events in which our Class participated were the Freshman-Sophomore Fence Orations. Henry Downing was the Class orator both on the occasion of our receiving the Sophomore fence and of our giving it away again. He executed the task humorously and well at each occurrence.

A rather amusing failure was registered against debating, when an attempt was made in Sophomore year to establish a Yale Union. A committee composed of Bill Mangold, Tom Painter, Gordon Dyke, '30, and Johnny Whitelaw, with Win Leighton as chairman, started off with minds full of big ideas and great hopes which swiftly dwindled when no general undergraduate support could be mustered.

Bob Houston.

Tom Painter and his Yale Court did a fine piece of work that year under the auspices of Dwight Hall in discussing world problems in their relation to religion.

Perhaps the most spontaneous, least heard of, and perhaps for that reason the most successful debating organization, which keeps itself strictly within the College, is the Yale Speaking Club, founded last year by John Louis Barde Brooke. It is an organization for those interested in the elements of speaking. It offers no honorary attractions, and its members consist of a few sincere individuals in search of forensic training.

The only other organization in any way connected with forensics is the Yale Liberal Club, fostered for two years by Bill Mangold, and ably directed in Junior and Senior years by Johnny Whitelaw. Its activities are so wide as to extend far beyond the range of debating alone. It is known chiefly for its connection with worthy causes, like the necktie workers' strike in New Haven, and for the fine speakers it brings to Yale platforms.

This has been in general a summary of the part 1929 has played in Yale forensics. But no picture, however clear, would be complete without mention of the guiding light and sponsor of debating at Yale, Professor John Chester Adams. His untiring efforts over a long period of years, without one vacation, have done more for debating activities than any other influence. In the face of discouragement he has done his work faithfully and well. In good years and bad years he has always succeeded in turning out teams worthy to represent Yale. He has never hoped too much for Yale debating and has never done too little. His vacation this spring, after so long a time without leave of absence, carries with it the best wishes of all, but Yale debating will miss him.

PUBLICATIONS

I N 1836 Samuel Morse was working on the telegraphic instrument he was to exhibit the following year. So busily was he occupied that history bears no evidence of his having heard that in Yale College a presumptuous group of students had published a little paper bearing the title, The Yale Literary Magazine. But, although the attention of Mr. Morse remained undiverted, Yale students saw, read, and approved. The first number was followed by a second. Before the third appeared there was a great cry for more subscriptions. A great tradition had been started.

As with a never changing pace it slowly approached its centennial, the magazine fell into the clutches of the 1928 board, and a few changes were made which members of the old guard called radical, but which were merely attempts to adjust the Lit to its changing environment and to avoid the complete downfall of what had become one of Yale's oldest institutions. Of these changes perhaps the most significant was the new system of electing editors, for from 1929 it brought to the board only one member by Senior year.

It was the opinion of the 1929 board that the attempted adjustments of the 1928 board were not complete, and with the January issue of our Senior year perished the old Lit of the past. The most evident of the changes—in fact, the only one extensively noticed—was that the cover was changed, or rather modified. In doing this the board had the expert advice and experience of Mr. Rollins of the University Press, one of the country's most eminent typographers. The problem before him was to modify the cover so that it would be more appealing psychologically and at the same time retain the distinct flavor of antiquity that had graced it in the past. To do this it was first of all decided that the figure of Elihu Yale (known to the College as "the picture of the little man") be preserved. The color was slightly changed in hue, as had been done many times in the past, and certain mechanical improvements effected, on the inside as well as the cover. The result of this orgy was, in the opinion of the board, a Lit more appealing to the eye and therefore to general public opinion and at the same time a Lit preserving the atmosphere traditionally peculiar to it.

Besides these mechanical changes, there were certain vital internal ones. The most outstanding of these were the election of Frank C. Wright as art editor and the introduction of pictures. In doing this, the Lit undoubtedly stepped beyond the field for which it was created, but there again the reason behind the innovation was merely an attempt to keep pace with a new environment.

The general policy of the Lit has been to print a wide variety of material, and an indication that it has been successful is seen in the great number of contributions turned in this year contrasted to last. Also, it may be added, the Class of 1932 continued to write for the Lit, although in the opinion of the more gloomy the arrival of the Helicon spelled desolation and destruction.

From the Lit we proceed to sunnier fields and treat of that plutocratic child of an industrial age, The Yale Daily News, with its subsidiary offspring, the Pictorial Supplement, the Literary Supplement, and the Supplement on National Affairs.

From the first Freshman competition 1929 gave evidence that here was the one field in which they were not mentally and physically deficient and that they would be a truly unusual board. Lowes, heeling with a terrific energy, smashed the record of Bartholomew and won the first competition by a wide margin. Sophomore year the board was completed and assembled for election of officers. Mysterious whispers of politics died out, and now no doubt exists but that the men chosen were the best for their respective positions.

Coming after the battle-loving boards of Stoddard, Post, and Bartholomew, each of whom had announced stupendous editorial platforms, it was but natural that at first the 1929 board would hammer at some weak point in the University. In the spring of 1928 the undergraduates became increasingly aware that an attack was being made on the educational policy. Long, unread editorials followed in quick succession, and the vitriolic pen of Ralph D. Paine was enlisted. Writing "Torquemada's" column in a forceful, logical way, he assisted Smith in convincing many members of the faculty of the truthfulness of the News' charges and the efficacy of the proposed remedy. Also writing editorials and "seeing people," Paul Mellon did a great deal in this campaign. How soon the realization of the suggestions will be effected is a question not answered, although the establishment of a Dean's List shows that something in this line has been done already. Perhaps the greatest accomplishment, though, was that the faculty seemed convinced that the undergraduate can himself think honestly and clearly on the subject most vital to him—how he is taught.

Senior year the News was quieter and more restrained. Instead of championing causes, Smith seemed to devote himself to taking some of the grimness out of undergraduate life. Freshman barbarians, imbued with the spirit of "making things" and "giving one's all to dear Yale," were amazed when, at one of the numerous rallies held for them, they heard him say, "If you have to heel something, then heel the News." Here was advice of a new, pleasant sort. Collegians in our midst were shocked and cried "sarcasm" when they noticed an editorial advocating the abolishment of organized cheering. A general plea for more leisure, more relaxation, less heeling, was the basic note. Here was a new theme in News editorials, and one that, if heeded, would make Yale a pleasanter place. Perhaps the apparent failure of the Class of 1929 to show "the right Yale attitude" may be traced to the generalness of this desire for a normal life despite Yale. If this is the case, 1929 should stand as a great, not a poor, class.

A further evidence of this policy was found in the strenuous efforts of the titanic Simmons to reduce the pressure under which News heelers formerly found themselves and actually to put efficiency into the organization. Late hours were practically abolished; and given one day of rest a week, heelers were no longer marked by circled eyes, wan faces, and the pale hunted look of the driven. Assisting in the control of competitions was E. H. Steif, the assignment editor.

First among the special columns was Whit Griswold's "Sancho Panza," which superseded Hellman's "Baron's Bower." After a distinctly hesitant start humor again began percolating into the News, and a reading of this column right before class made the dulllest of 8:20's less sordid. Graham, writing "The Play's the Thing," furnished the dramatic criticism and displayed his intimate knowledge of the theatre. Lastly (and last only because it was written by a member of 1930), was the musical column by John Evarts. Instead of by tone deaf heelers, all concerts and recitals were handled by him, and it was rumored that the News was again allowed in Sprague Hall—in fact was read in Sprague Hall!

The Literary Supplement, originally the idea of the 1929 board, though started under Bartholomew, was continued by News Pictorial Board.

Stokes. More reviews appeared, a more careful selection of reviewers was made, and people never known to be seen reading a book were often caught perusing the Literary Supplement.

The Supplement on National Affairs, edited by a member of 1930, commenced under the 1928 board and was discontinued by the 1929 board, a fact worth noting by those cynics who shout the superiority of our predecessors. Containing a wealth of good material, the best that may be said of this Supplement is that it was an unfortunate experiment, proving that the majority of undergraduates are not interested yet in what they should be.

The Pictorial Supplement under the guidance of Shepley continued to meet a definite need in the University, although by Senior year it was not as exciting to see one's friends in photographic reproduction as in Freshman Oval days. Some of the pictures were fascinatingly unusual. There was the comic issue of Derby Day in Junior year, with the wonderful composite pictures of Eddy, Wack, and other campus characters. And then, in the fall, there was the picture of Spiel and Ladd—perhaps it wouldn't be an exaggeration to attribute the loss of the Harvard game to the continuous laughter this photograph caused among the entire University. In a way we wish the Pic had fulfilled its threat and come out for Smith while the News was filling its columns with Republican propaganda—but then that would have caused a break in the harmonious relation between the two, a relation that has done a great deal to assist both.

With the new building threatening to become an actuality after years of promises, the Record has been prosperous in the matter of business heelers. But perhaps the souls of jesters are too ethereal to heed such a bait of the flesh, for we dare utter the innuendo that the Record of 1929 has been no funnier than that of the previous board.

The Record, as well as the Lit, found 1929 a barren ground from which to reap a harvest of literary product. Slowly, though, contributions from our Class began filtering into the pages, and by the time Macdonald was ready to pass the torch and spirit it was disclosed that a 1929 board had actually come into existence. Chairman Pepper, after supervising some delightful issues in the spring of 1928, came a cropper with the faculty, but soon triumphed and resumed his sway. The remainder of the issues, although perhaps no funnier than those of 1928, were still such that no subscriptions were cancelled.

Art missed the presence of Osborn at first, but then flourished, with Folds, 1930, leading the rally. Two-line quips showed an alarming increase, and there was a half-hearted attack on the Lit that would have been funny if it had been justified, and would have been justified if it had been funny. Encouraging features were the absence of ungentlemanly gibes at the personalities of the faculty and the pedaling of the sex note which had enjoyed a crescendo under the former régime.

It must be remembered that while most publications reflect their editors, the Record and the Lit are peculiar in that they are dependent on the ability of their contributors. For this reason we maintain that the 1929 board really did very well with the Record.

The Freshman Year Book, edited by Ashley and a coterie of Andover assistants, was well done and proved to be most useful in the vital art of learning the names and faces of classmates. It also was a complete record of activities and contained delightful informal photographs which furnish amusement now as we look through mob scenes and identify our friends as they appeared before being swallowed in the great maws of the Yale machine.

At the time of this writing, the 1929 Banner and Pot Pourri has not made its appearance, but there are not many changes that can overtake this annual publication, except that perhaps we are right in noticing an increasing attractiveness in its general composition and an attempt to make it more than a directory. Judging from the personnel of the 1929 board, this year should be no exception in the trend. And we add that if any scoff the importance of the Pot Pourri, may he have the bad fortune to be the first in the entry to return with a new copy.

These then are the publications of Yale, the publications that have occupied the attention of 1929. By old standards we have not been a good class in this field any more than we have in any other. Indifference has been the typical attitude, but not apparently an indifference marking inability as some would think. A sense of maturity showed the Class that heeling was not the only thing worth while about college. Yet what had to be done was attended to, as the publications attest. There is no reason for us to have any feeling except pride concerning these permanent records of our four years at Yale—records that will remain until Yale and time in their death struggles groan.

What is your chief regret in regard to your college career?

That it's over. . . . Not having made numerals. . . . Not having had a scholastic goal. . . . That I did not have my present attitude towards learning throughout my college career. . . . Lack of athletic capacity. . . . That I did not take up more extra-curriculum activities. . . . That I did not attend more lectures and recitals. . . . That it is impossible to take many good courses. . . . That it doesn't last four years more. . . . Not enough cuts. . . . That I did not get oriented quickly enough. . . . Poor choice of courses. . . . That I didn't get a bigger allowance. . . . That it did not have four Senior years instead of one. . . . That I did not start drinking in Freshman year. . . . That I did not read enough. . . . That the results are so intangible. . . . Time unprofitably spent. . . . That it took me three years to meet some of the fellows that I know now. . . . That I didn't work for Phi Beta Kappa. . . . That I did not study. . . . The chiming of bells and the striking of clocks. . . . That I can't start over again. . . . Not knowing members of the faculty better. . . . That I did not heel the News. . . . That New York is not fifty miles closer. . . . Not appreciating the value of courses. . . . That my roommate was not fired long ago. . . . The passing of Billy Bender. . . . Freshman year. . . . I reserve my regrets for the 50th Reunion. . . . Having to take biology twice. . . . That confused scatter-brained curriculum. . . . That I didn't go to prep school.

What thing about Yale either in the curriculum or extra-curriculum benefited you the most?

My friends. . . . The lack of the rah-rah spirit. . . . Such inspiring instructors. . . . N.Y., N.H. & H. . . . The football games. . . . Its nearness to New York City. . . . Billy Phelps. . . . The showers. . . . Hell's Entry. . . . The News. . . . Bureau of Appointments. . . . Opportunity for self-support and scholarship aid. . . . 8:20 classes. . . . Yale atmosphere in general. . . . Contact with people from every spot in the world. . . . Small classes. . . . Getting suspended. . . . Bull sessions. . . . Fraternities. . . . Yale Station. . . . Sleep. . . . Ten-minute papers. . . . Athletics. . . . Three meals a day. . . . The Glee Club. . . . Campus Police. . . . The English Department. . . . Cosmopolitanism. . . . Harkness Tower at night.

What do you think is Yale's greatest need?

More rich alumni. . . . A more flexible curriculum. . . . Adequate dormitories for Freshmen. . . . Abolishment of prohibition. . . . A revision of requirements and a broader choice of electives. . . . Good beer. . . . Higher salaries for the faculty. . . . Smaller classes. . . . Intelligence. . . . Better instruction for Freshmen. . . . To kill off some of the tailors. . . . Better contact with prominent alumni. . . . Class unity. . . . More "whoopie" as of old. . . . More green vegetables. . . . More intelligent undergraduates. . . . Telephones for all. . . . More fraternities. . . . Extension of the system of honors work. . . . Auto tunnel under Elm Street or abolish the street all together. . . . More honors courses. . . . More workers and fewer drones. . . . A University beer parlor. . . . A reading period before exams. . . . A faster milk train. . . . A new Gym; no 8:20's; longer vacations; younger "bids"; intelligent janitors; private tutor for the Hamilton brothers. . . . Complete room service. . . . Division into smaller units. . . . Abolish Yale Station. . . . Undergraduates looking for an education. . . . Somebody to watch the Campus Cops. . . . Elevators. . . . A good-looking "highest prices" old clothes man. . . . More opportunity for independent study for those who wish it regardless of high scholarship stand. . . . A more unified and democratic spirit. . . . Better instructors for Freshman and Sophomore years. . . . Women. . . . Bigger beds.
